Mr Joshua Nkomo, co-leader of the Patriotic Front, emphasized the need for peace and reconciliation when he returned yesterday to Southern Rhodesia after more than three years in exile. He was given a tumultuous reception at a rally in the black township of Highfield, near Salisbury.

Call for reconciliation between rival groups

From Nicholas Ashford

Salisbury, Jan 13 Mr Joshua Nkomo, co-leader Mr Joshua Nkomo, co-leader of the Patriotic Front Guerrilla organization and president of the Zimbabwe African People's Union (Zapu), returned to Salisbury today after more than three years in exile, to a hero's welcome from his supporters. At a large and emotional welcoming rally at the welcoming rally at the Zimbabwe Grounds, in the black township of Highfield, near Salisbury, Mr Nkomo called for peace and reconciliation between the groups who had been fighting one another during the past seven years of bush warfare. Ir was a theme which he also emphasized during an air-port press conference, excerpts of which were seen on televi-sion tonight by the nation's 230,000 white minority who have held Mr Nkomo responsible for the shooting down of two Air Rhodesia civil aircraft within the last 18 months.

Mr Nkomo also told his supporters of the need for unity and made it clear that he intended to contest next month's election under the banper of the Patriotic Front and not Zapu, even though Zapu's parmer in the Front, the Zimbabwe African National Union (Zanu), headed by Mr Robert Mugabe, has said it will fight the election separately.

The Zapu leader called on Britain to enlarge the Commonwealth peace monitoring force from 1,200 men to more than 5.000 to prevent confrontation between the security forces and Patriotic Front guerrillas during the ceasefire.

during the ceasefire.

He "unreservedly condemned" the killing of seven of his Zimbabwe People's Revolutionary Army (Zipra) guerrillas by the security forces last Thursday and called on Britain and Lord Soames, the Governor, to ensure that similar incidents were avoided.

Mr Nkomo arrived in Salisbury three hours late because the Zambin Airways jet in the Zambia Airways jet in which he was travelling developed mechanical problems. He was accompanied by senior Zapu officials, including Mr Josiah Chinamano, the vice-president, and by about 50 young men and girls, dressed in the party colours of red, green and yellow, described as "refugees" who had been living in camps in Zambia. ing in camps in Zambia.

For security reasons only a handful of top Zapu officials were at the airport to greet him together with several members of Zanu's central committee, who had flown in from Maputo an hour earlier on the first scheduled flight to Salisbury by Deta, the Mozambique airline. Police, some armed with rifles and others with become and and others with batons and shields, ringed the airport and only passengers and journalists were allowed in the terminal building:

immediately after his arrival, Mr Nkomo was taken to the Highfield rally in a Puma belicopter belonging to the monitoring force—a move which was condemned by Bishop Abel Muzorewa, leader of the United African National Council (UANC), who said the force should not make such facilities available to any party for a poli-

The crowd at the Zimbabwe Grounds was estimated at be-tween 100,000 and 150,000, more than twice as many as at last week's rally addressed by Bishop Muzorewa. Mr Nkomo, who showed he had lost none of his oratorical skills during his exile, was loudly applauded when he told the crowd that the Patriotic Front had been created for the people of Zimbabwe as a whole and that they were marching to independence under the Patriotic Front's banner. At his airport press confeared that this could lead to a steady erosion of the ceasefire. As he understood the Lancaster House agreement, he said, both thhe Rhodesian forces and the guerrillas should remain in their designated bases or essembly areas.

In his view it was the role of the monitoring force to ensure that they stayed there and were not allowed to confront each other. This was why he was now calling for the "lament-ably small" Commonwealth force to be enlarged.

Mr Brezhnev denies aggressive designs on Iran or Pakistan

Moscow, Jan 13

President Brezhnev today called the United States an absolutely unreliable partner in international affairs and said the Russians could manage per-fectly well without any ties with the Americans.
In a full front-page statement to the party newspaper Pravda.

he responded to President Carter's acts of retaliation for the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, by declaring that the American leadership appeared to be prompted by whim, caprice or emononal outbursts.

However, the statement was made more in sorrow than in anger. It was a tough defence of Soviet policies, and a condemnation of what the Soviet leader depicts as the irresponsible policies of the Americans. But at no time did Mr Brezhnev threaten any counter-retaliation, or accept the idea that Soviet-American relations must now go back into a deep freeze. He said the national interests or security of the United States and other states were not affeced in any way by the events in Afghanistan. The allega-tions are also absolutely false that the Soviet Union has some expansionist plans in respect of Pakistan. Iran or other countries of that area.

The policy and psychology of colonialists is alient to us. We are not covering the lands or wealth of others. It is the colonialists who are attracted by the smell of oil."

When he turned to Europe —in marked contrast to his sharp words about the United States—Mr Brezhnev said he has optimistic. Much progress had been made in relations with Western Europe in the past decade, and Western Europe needed detents as much as Eastern Europe.

Analysts have already suggested that the Russians might now try to be particularly friendly to Western Europe in an attempt to divide the European members of Nato from the United States. Mr Brezhney said that much of a constructive nature could be accomplished in Europe for the good of peace in the near

Pravda readers that President Carter's actions would not inflict the damage on the Russians Nyerere accusation, page 4 hoped for. Cynical estimates about the worsening of the Soviet food situation because of the grain embargo were based on "nonsensical notions about our economic potential". "In particular, I can assure that the plans of providing the Soviet people with bread and bakery products will not be lessened by a single kilogramme." Mr Brezhnev did not say anything about meat.

Such unilateral measures, he went on, were "tantamount to serious miscalculations in politics" and would rebound on their initiators. Mr Brezhnev did not mince his words in denouncing Washington's policies. The world now believed, he said, that the United States was capable at any moment of violating its international obligations, and cancelling treaties and agree-ments signed by it. This had a "dangerous destabilizing im-pact" on the entire inter-national situation. The begin-ning of the 1980s had marked a noticeable deterioration in this, and the Americans were to blame.

"The blame is on all those who see in the relaxation of tension an obstacle to their aggressive plans, to whipping up militaristic psychosis, to inter-ference in the internal affairs of other peoples.

"The blame is on those who have a deeply ingrained habit of behaving in a cavalier man-ner with other states, of acting in the international arena in a way as though everything is permitted them."

Mr Brezhnev said that the Sait 2 treaty "would have opened the way to big steps in the field of disarmament". It was supported by all the world, including America's Nato allies.

"What did the Carter Administration do with it? Hardly was the treaty signed when people in the United States began discrediting it. As to the process of ratification, the opponents of the treaty—not without the connivance of gov-eroment circles in the United States—actually began using it to complicate the treaty's ratifi-cation to the utmost."

America was using Afghanistan as a pretext to aggravate the situation in the world, he continued. It was not the real cause of the present difficulties, and if there was no Afghani-stan, America would have found another pretext.

Railwaymen name price for higher productivity By David Felton

Labour Reporter
Union leaders are to meet the British Railways Board today to discuss their proposals for a "railwaymen's charter" involving £300m, the price the unions have set on cooperating with wide-ranging productivity

The charter includes claims for a shorter working week, increased holidays and improvements in basic rates of pay.
Mr Sidney Weighell, general secretary of the National Union Railwaymen said last night: We are hoping that we can make some progress on our sub-mission. If this is possible, we bave said that we are prepared to look at everything and anything that the board would like

His requests for publication come at a time when The Times has received further and more up-to-date information on the activities of the "Militant Tendency", a clandestine Trotskyist organization, with its own full-time staff, whose aims are to penetrate the Labour Party. The document; circulated among its supporters in October extended influence. 1978, outlines its strategy, and sets out proposals on how to organize public meetings as part of its recruiting campaign. Without actually mentioning its paper, Militant, it states that the circulation is about 8,000, but there is a clear indication that not all of its sales workforce is returning the money to headquarters. Due to what it calls "lack of accounting" by tendency. some sellers the organization claimed to be losing £240 a week or £12,000 a year.

Great store is set on the paper. The document states: The paper is the most important armoury we have for use in the labour movement. . "The responsibility is on each and every comrade to build the revolutionary party and the paper is the main tool in this work."

How far the tendency has penetrated the constituency parties—the Trotskyists already have a strong hold on the Young Socialists—is difficult to gauge, but Lord Underhill doubts that as many as 60 parties may be affected. Much of the document is heavily theoretical, including bitter criticism of the Socialist Workers Party, a rival revolutionary organization, but this is part and parcel of the constant tribal warfare between the different tendencies. But in doing so, the Militant Tendency stakes out its own claims.

It states, for example, that "it is our tendency alone that has understood the loyalty that British workers instinctively have towards the Labour Party and that it is a movement of the class into it that will retransform it ".

When asked whether the infiltration had got worse since the compilation of his 1977 report, Lord Underhill said: "There is sufficient evidence-I would rather not use the word worsethat they have extended their influence, carrying out their objective, which is to get what they called trained cadres in as many units of the Labour Party as they can. In some cases, it may mean a very few constituency parties where they have actually got controlling cies they have got members there who endearour to influence their organization."

Cautious optimism as steel union leaders prepare for talks with arbitration service

A series of meetings over the next three days will decide the direction of the national steel strike, which is about to enter its third week.

There is some cautious optimism that talks between the unions and the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (Acas) may produce a framework for a reopening of negotiations, although it is unlikely that any important advance will be made in the immediate future.

Mr William Sirs, general recretary of the Iron and Steel Trade Confederation, and Mr Hector Smith, leader of the National Union of Blassfurnacemen, are this afternoon to meet Mr James Mortimer, chairman of Acas, to set out their views on the strike.

Mr Sirs is coming under strong pressure from his 90,000 mem-bers on strike to widen the dispute, and there is some evid-ence that the ISTC leadership is having difficulty controlling the members, who are deter-

Miners throughout the South Wales coafield voted yesterday to give their local leaders the power to organize a strike against steel job cutbacks and increases in coking coal imports.

During the last war Professor Anthony Blunt tried to persuade MI5 officials to recruit Guy Burgess into the organization, according to sources yesterday. At the time MI5 often took new members

MIS often fook new members on recommendation, but Burgess's outlandish reputation had preceded him and Professor Blunt's suggestion was rejected. At the beginning of the war Burgess worked for a War Office department called Section D, which was concerned with planning commands and with planning commando-style adventures. After the disbandment of the department he eventually joined the BBC, be-coming a freelance supplier of odds bits of information to MIS. Professor Blunt's attempt to get him into the MI5, according to an intelligence source, were scotched by Mr Guy Liddell, a senior officer who had been in MI5 before the war. Doubt was raised by Burgess's behaviour and attitude which were not thought acceptable within the security service.

Bitter struggle among Ulster Unionists From Christopher Thomas Belfast

Ulster's divided unionists is increasing sharply in the votarice political atmosphere sur-rounding the Government's constitutional conference on power devolution.

The Democratic Unionists, led by the Rey Ian Paisley, are maintaining a concerted propa-ganda attack on the Official Unionists in the knowledge that success or failure of the political initiative could determine which

Mr James Molynesux, the Official Unionists' leader, is by contrast elmost silent as his higher time a continue their calculations. bitter rivals continue their criticism. He remains convinced that his decision to boycott the conference will be justified by events.

The Democratic Unionists war of words was intensified by Mr Peter Robinson, the party's MP for Belizer East, who religi-ously follows Mr Paisley's reaction to events. He said the great divide was here. There was still room in the DUP for those who rejected the "fer-vently anti-Stormont stence," of Mr. Molyneaux The implication, frequently levelled by the DUP at Mr Molyneaux, is that the Official Unionists are becoming in-creasingly integrationist. Mr Molyneaux denies the charge. He said: "If the constitutional conference fails I shall not crow about it. The important thing is to get on and

Shotton For 900 of the 6,400 strikers at the Shotton steelworks, this week brings the end of their careers in the industry, And there is now a growing belief in the Deesside town that, with the steel unions set for a protracted battle, iron and steel making will never be resumed at the

New magazine aims to tell: Parisians about Paris

From Charles Hargrove
Paris, Jan 13
In Paris these days one hears more frequently of newspapers

last born of M Jean-Louis Servan-Schreiber, has better prospects than most, owing to its progenitor's American marketing methods, sound business sense and a nous for what the French public wants. Endless acres of flat, brown, recrangular fields, their rough raths fringed with ice, stretch into the distance, each farm with its group of white buildings on one edge. "Tonight Waterloo has become the centre of the civilized world". he declared. "Iowa may well decide, as it did in 1976, who the next President will be." Senator Edward. Kennedy and Governor Jerry Brown of California nodded in Four years ago Mr Carter, by campaigning doggedly and winning more votes in precinct caucuses here than any other Democratic candidate, emerged from obscurity to take a lead he never lost. It is now the received wisdom that to do well in lows is a prerequisite to winning the nomination.

The caucuses are the first stage in a complex election pro-cedure which proves the United States to be the world's most thorough going democracy. At next Monday's meetings of a few hundred people in each of any candidates.

This year, if the latest opinion nolls are a guide, the President will do even better by staying away than he did by his persis-tent campaigning in 1976. The Des Moines Register poll on Friday gave him 57 per cent of the Democratic vote and Mr Kennedy only 25 per cent. Despite the farmers hurt over the grain embargo, this is a longer lead than the President enjoys in polls covering the whole parion.

He has stayed in Washington to cope with the crises over Iran and Afghanistan, sending a host of surrogates to Iowa. Mr Mondale is one of them, and during the last few days the state has had visits from the President's

The grain embargo was the subject of the most passionate disagreement. Mr Kennedy and Mr Brown argue that it would hurt the farmers more than the Russians. Mr Brown quoted General Patton: "The point of warfare is not to die for your country but to make sure that warfare is not to die for your country but to make sure that your adversary dies for his."

Mr Kennedy, weatherbeaten and hoarse after six days hard slogging, said the embargo "will hurt the farmer more, the tax-payer more, than it will hurt the Soviet transgressor". The crisis had been caused, he said, by President Carter's vaciliation in foreign affairs, adding: "I.

Dr Nyerere accuses... Britain of murder

Dar es Salaum, Jan 13— President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania has accused Britain of cold-blooded murder, deceit and treachery over the killing last Thursday of Patriotic Front guerrillas by Rhodesian security

Afterwards he told a pres conference at his beachside villa that he hoped Britain would call a halt to what he described as its crimes in Rhodesia and carry out the spirit of the London peace agreement.

He hinted that if it did not, Tanzania may take tougher action and perhaps break diplo-matic relations, as it did in 1965 when Rhodesia made its uni-lateral declaration of indepen-

Dr Nyerere said he understood that 13 Patriotic Front guerrillas had been killed in the past few days, seven of them by security forces while they were trying to reach an assembly point.

"The Governor (Lord Soames) has tried to justify that action by saying the security forces were acting within their rights... We consider that action cold-blooded

He said the British were not even using the Commonwealth monitoring forces to receive the guerrillas and escort them to assembly areas at laid down in the Lancaster House pact. Instead, he complained, they were using troops of the former Salisbury Administration who should have been confined to their harmselve.

President Zia ul-Haq turned down today a passionate appeal by tribal leaders of the North West Frontier Province to be allowed to wage Jihad (holy war) against Soviet troops in Afghanistan. It was, he told them, a time for restraint.

The President arrived in Peshawar yesterday for consultations with local leaders which culminated in his speech to the tribal irrea in a multi-coloured tribal jirga in a multi-coloured tent erected on the lawns of

He denied once again Soviet allegations that Pakistan was being used to train Afghan guerrillas. The point was, he said, to consider why 421,000 people have been compelled to leave their homes; they had come to Pakistan because their life, honour and property were in danger and an attempt was being made to force on them an ideology opposed to theirs.

It also seemed he felt he could do no more than turn a blind eye if the tribesmen did start fighting in Afghanistan. "I am confident that, as long as tyranny and oppression last, our Afghan brothers will continue to receive your traditional hospitality", he said.

In answer to reporters' questions, he said that in practice tions, he said that in practice there was nothing Pakistan could do to control the order

Jones fights back to win gruelling first race

The 1980 world championship season got off to a bumpy start in Buenos Aires yesterday when Alan Jones and his Williams-Ford FW07B, sponsored by Leyland Vehicles and Saudi Arabian backers won a gruelling Argentine Grand Prix on a 3.7-mile circuit declared race-fit only after overnight resurfacing. Of the 28 cars and drivers present. 24 started and only nine finished. The four who failed to qualify were the two new Shadow drivers, Kennedy and Johansson, Lanumers (ATS) and Cheever (Osella).

Jones, making best use of pole

(ATS) and Cheever (Osella).

Jones, making best use of pole position on the staggered, 24-car starting grid, accelerated into an immediate lead from Laffite (Ligier), who had been second quickest in practice, and on the second lap the Ligier challenge was blutted when Pironi slid off the track and retired with damaged front suspension.

On lan 3 Piguet made a strong aged front suspension.

On lap 3 Piquet made a strong attack with his Brabham BT49B and moved ahead of Laffite into second place, while Reutemann, who had made a lightening-quick start from tenth position on the grid, was already up in fourth place. On lap 10, however, the Argentinian rushed into his pit to have a blocked air intake cleared, to the bitter disappointment of a crowd estimated at between 65,000 and $0,000.

Other reams were already in Other teams were already in worse trouble. Andretti brought worse trouble. Andretti brought his Lotus Si into the pits after only four laps, and de Angelis followed him into retirement just three laps later with suspension trouble on the second Lotus. Both Renaults, from which much had been expected despite their lowly grid positions, were also early retirements, Jabouille's suffering clutch failure and Arnoux's damaged suspension.

The Ferraris of Villeneuve and damaged suspension.

The Ferraris of Villeneuve and Scheckter, eighth and eleventh on the grid, were now running strongly in third and fifth places, then on lap 16 jones suddenly rushed into his pit for a plastic bag to be removed from a radiator intake. The stop dropped him to fourth place and put Laffite into the lead ahead of Piquet and Villeneuve, but Jones fought back strongly. When Laffite's engine expired on lap 30, the Australian was back in first place again, having passed both Piquet and Villeneuve. Scheckter was now fourth, followed by Rosberg, Daly, Glacomelli and Prost, and half the field had dropped out of the race. The next to go, on lap 37, was Villeneuve with damaged front suspension, which brongh Scheckter up into third place behind blone.

ter up into third place behind Piquet. Soon afterwards Gia-comelli moved into fifth place with his Alfa Romeo behind Rosberg, whose Fittipaldi and Wolf-derived car is being entered this year as a Skol. Then, with just seven of the 53 laps left. Schecker's engine overheated and the remaining Ferrari came to a halt, leaving Jones to record a worthy victory from Piquet, whose performance underlined the newly-found competitiveness of newly-found competitiveness of the Brabham team.

A fine drive by Daly in one of last year's Tyrrells was rewarded with fourth place, ahead of the only finisher with other than a Cosworth Ford DFV engine, Giacomelli's Alfa Romeo. Prost gained a world championship point in his first grand prix, which must have pleased the McLaren team as much as himself, and the remaining three finishers, Zunino Regazzoni (Ensign)

South Africa's chance to end its isolation

Johannesburg, Jan 13
Any South African organization which refused to meet the Sports Council's fact finding mission on apartheid and sport were letting down their own supporters, Dick Jeeps, the chairman, said here today. "They will be missing an opportunity of putting their side of the matter", he said.
Contrary to what he had read, opportunity of putting their side of the matter", he said.

Contrary to what he had read, nobody so far had declined to meet the Bridgh delegation and that included the predominantly non-white South African Council of Sport (SACOS), whose president, Hassan Howa, had been reported as saying there was no point in the council's visit as the Lions had already decided to tour. SACOS officials had told Miss Olive Newson, an executive officer of the council, who is acting as the mission's secretary: "We will be very pleased to meet you".

Mr Jeeps was asked about the attitude in London of the South African ton-racial Olympic committee and if he had met Peter Hain, chairman of the Stop All Racist Tours committee. "I think it fair to say that we left with SANEOC's groundil!" he said mattee and it he had mer reter Hain. chairman of the Stop All Racist Tours committee. "I think it fair to say that we left with SANROC's goodwill", he said. "As for Mr Hain. I found him a much more reasonable person than his public image might suggest. We had full talks in a reasonable and calm atmosphere". Mr Jeeps said it would be imprudent to comment on the Lions tour, though in some ways the decision to tour had taken some of the pressure off his visit. The delegation had an open mind. Mr Jeeps went on, and would rid themselves of any prejudices they might hold. He agreed he would need to remind two of his colleagues. Bernard Atha, a Leeds City councillor, and Basil d'Oliveira, the Cape coloured who played Test cricket for England, about the need to avoid bias. Both have criticized conditions in South Africa in the past. D'Oliveira is already in Capetown; Mr Atha and Arthur Gold, the president of the European Athletics Federation, the fourth member of the mission, were due to arrive in Johannesburg later today.

In addition to the Jeeps mission, a French partiamentary delegation, including Albert Ferrasse, president of the French Partiamentary delegation including Albert Ferrasse, president of the French party were shown on relevision yesterday visiting a cricket match in Capetown, which might be cited as an example of Gallic thoroughness. The question whether the tour will bring beneficial results. Almost 10 years have clapsed since South Africa were expelled from the International Olympic Committee and since then the republic's sporting isolation has been intensified. Despondency replaced hope as changes in South African sport went unacknowledged. Suddenly, however, there is a realization that the Lions visit could bring another chance. The coming weeks will show whether South Africa deserves that chance; the coming months will prove whether they earned it.

This weekend Punt Janson, the This weekend Punt Janson, the South African minister for sport, has been quoted as saying that all aspects of sport will be reviewed, with the possibility of discrimina-tory laws against sportsmen being wived. Whether it is really postory laws against sportsmen being wrived. Whether it is really possible for sport to be exempted from the laws of the land remains to be seen. Acts covering such things at group areas, separate amenities and liquor can hardly disappear from the statute hook for one class of person. One interpretation of Mr Janson's remarks has been that an admission ticket to a sporting fixture could bring temporary exemption with special permits no longer necessary.

Mr Howa argues that blacks cannot be expected to accept sporting equality on the field with whites only to be humiliated by poorer facilities and apartheid laws off it. Remembering the long years of dispute and unhappiness, compromise is unlikely between government and SACOS.

About 10 black and coloured players are expected to be among the 60 players to be named by the South African board shortly for the three days of trials in Pretoria from April 14 to 16. Several of the non whites were with the South African Barbarians in Britain last October but even some of their own officials gire in Britain last October but even some of their own officials give them only an outside chance of them only an outside chance of retaining the selectors' interest. They are members of the South African Rugby Association (blacks) and the South African Rugby Federation (coloureds), which are affiliated to the white South African board. Some 80 per cent of non-white rugby players belong to yet another body, the South African Rugby Union, who refuse to have anything to do with the board.

Thanks for an Englishman

By Keith Macklin

By Keith Macklin
Chauvinism it may sound like, but it is a mercy that Fred Lindop, an Englishman, was in charge of yesterday's under 24 international at Carcassonne. The linevitable eruption came in the 20th minute after the British front row forward, Roldstock, had flattened a Frenchman. For a while it seemed that chaos would reign as fists and boots flew, but Mr Lindop went into the melée and when a breathing space occurred sent off two men. Keith Rayne, the British forward, and his French opposite number, Vidal.

Mr Lindop's prompt action

Mr Lindop's prompt action enabled the game to proceed, if not attractively, at least without further brawls and Britain maintained their 100 per cent record in these matches with an 11—7 victory. Britain made hard work victory. Britain mase nara work of it, however. They scored three tries to one, but Burke after kicking an early penalty missed with several kicks, and when Pinner took over he was also unable to measure the target. Drummood and Stephenson scored tries for Britain, but a gift interception my put France back in the running at 8—7. The visitors had to show firm defence to hold out a wave of attacks before Smith sent Feuton over for the deciding try.

Once agalu Wigan stole the honours and headlines in the domestic programme. Maintaining their splendid revival, they gave Hull Kingston Rocers 12: gave Hull Kingston Rovers 12 points start on Humberside before hitting 23 points in a fine victory. The outstanding Wigan try came from the young centre.
Stockley, Hornby, Campbell and Melling getting the other tries.
Fairbairn, the captain, kicked five goals and O'Nell dropped a goal.
Another thrilling match took place at Wakefield where Widnes came back after last week's John Player defeat to beat Trimity
19—13. It was traditional endto-end stuff between last season's Challenge Cup finalists and the Widnes victory was only sealed in the last minute with a try by Gorley to which Eckersley added the goal.

Slough's best men leave rivals toiling

Slough, the national champions, looked much sharper than all their rivals in the Indoor Hockey News club tournament, sponsored by Alfred Reader and Company at the Monrem Sports Centre, Slough, yesterday. They won all three pool matches easily on their way to the semi-final round and later qualified for the final by beating Blackheath.

Sixteen of the best British clubs Sixteen of the best British clubs accepted invitations to this rournament which brought together the champions of three home countries, Slough (England), Cardiff (Wales), and Avoca (Ireland). Murray International Metals, the Scottish champions were unable to accept because of other commitments.

It was typical of Slough to have to put up their best side as a build-up for bigger events to come. Some other clubs fielded sides which were below their usual strength. Manjit Llora, one of the leading Slough players came off the night train from Edinburgh at six in the morning retain both titles

England retained both men's and women's titles in the home countries international squash championships, sponsored by Langham Life, without dropping a rubber. Yet they had some close shaves in the final series at the Edinburgh Sports Club yesterday. Barry O'Connor, playing in the third match against Ben Cranwell, of Ireland, was 4—8 down in the fifth and deciding game before winning 10—8.

In a second women's match Geraldine Beruaville, of Ireland, who throughout the weekend had played consistently well, did her best to upset the new British junior champion, Alison Cummins, who was promoted in the order because of the eye injury her captain, Barbara Diggens sustained on Friday night.

England's men were well led by Jonathan Leslie, who had a superb final match against Richard Power, making a comeback this season after a year's absence through injury. Power raised his game to match the British No 1 and was unlucky not to win a game before Leslie triumphed 9—6. 9—8, 9—5.

Olympic Games IOC president says Games stay in Moscow

The 1980 Olympic Games will not be switched to Montreal, Munich or anywhere else, the IOC president Lord Killamin emphasized in an interview published in yesterday's Sunday Press of Dublin. "When the IOC gave the Games to Moscow, the American Olympic committee were strongly in support," he said. "We do not go back on our word; In any event, it would be physically impossible." He added that he did not believe in "the use of sport for political purposes whatever one's views." He also said that the majority of the IOC consider the British Lions rugby tour as "insensitive at this stage" and revealed that the IOC would be sending a commission of inquiry to South-Africa after the 1980 games.

A fresh episode in the series of matches between Nottingham Forest and Liverpool begins on Wednesday might in the Football League Cop semi-final round and for a few weeks thereafter it will take prodisjous effort to divert attention elsewhere. With that in mind, it was opportune on Saturday to enquire whether the Second Division had a team which could in the future provide a youthful challenge to the accomplished Liverpool.

The virtuosity of Francis was rewarded after S5 minutes when he put Forest in front. Mills made a present of the goal with an atrocious back pass and Francis lashed the ball past Godden from point-blank range. With eight minutes to go Francis was in the thick of the action again, setting Anderson free in the penalty area for the full back to make it 3—1. Robertson, one of many harassed West Bromwich defenders, had his name taken for a heavy tackle on Francis, but although the England international held the stage this was not a one-man show. If Liverpool have any room for emotion after so many years of sterd 'tests' and resounding triumphs, they will have been conscious of gnawing twinges persisting uncomfortably at the prospect of starting the 1980s with a League defeat at Anfield where they lost fewer than a dozen matches in the whole of the last decade. He and Nicholi countered Johnson and Dalgiish at almost every turn and Holmes covered much ground on the left flank as Southampton speedily brought men back behind the ball, then released them as swiftly to move forward when Liverpool's attacks broke down. When they were taxed, Wells invariably took the bell with splendidly capable hands. Liverpool's passes strayed more than they usually do. # Garden party declines to a brawl

By Stuart Jones

It all started in the delightful atmosphere of a garden party. As though lifting teacups with little fingers raised, West Ham United and Watford engaged in charming conversation on Saturday afternoon at Upton Park. By the evening it had ended in the hot, steamy air of a sleazy pub with bonours shared in the 1—1 draw. With improductions scarcely completed, Watford might have taken a brusque, almost rude, lead but Parkes twice thwarted Ward. As if they had spoken out of turn, Watford then receded and allowed West Ham to join in. Brooking and Devonshire relish such invitations, particularly when the company is so polite. By Stuart Jones

Watford spoilt it by going ahead soon after the innerval. Once serene, it was now serious. A compact unit that is beginning to take shape at some expense, Watford succeeded in carrying out what had been an idle threat by scoring a spectacular goal. First time passes from Booth and Henderson left the busy Rostron in position to hit a dipping drive from the edge of the box.

The pleasantiles were now forgotten, farst by the crowd, a small pocket of whom erupud in violence. Then Neighbour "equalized", after Devoashire's wall pass with a corner flag had led to a cross from Brooking, only to find that Pearson had been ruled offside. It was difficult to see how. It was easier to see why Lampard was booked for an ugly packle on Blissett.

By now West Ham had almost lost their heads as well. With the diminuitive Pike and the frail Pearson as targets, an aerial argument was doomed and yet they persisted in trying. With almost their last breath, though, they drew level when Pike's overhead kick from a half-cleared corner flew in off Bonis's head. head kick from a Baif-cleared corner flew in off Bonds's head.

Irish doubts; No. 8 Willie Duggan made a dramatic exit from the Irish party's practice session at Lansdowne Road yesterday and is doubtful for the match against England, Exchange Telegraph reports. After training for an hour he left the field feeling dizzy and was detained overnight for observation in hospital. If Duggan is unfit, his place will be taken by Donal Spring (Dublin University). Alfred McLennan (Wanderers), the left wing, is also doubtful for Twickenham because of a hamstring injury. Then, with Creed, his captain and pack leader, he got Poole away on the wing. When no score resulted a spectator exhorted Sale to "Play it simple "—which led one to wonder if some deep-laid tactical plan was the cause of their disorganization.

The same ended as it began, with Bedford hammening at the Sale defence. Only a fine tackle by Kascow, a Sale forward, stopped Waller, Bedford's left-centre, scoring a try, and Youngs, their scram half, missed a fairly simple scram half, missed a fairly simple penalty after missing two which were difficult. # England call How the great wall of Pontypridd flattened the men of Cardiff

Although contesting the last round on two occasions Cardiff have never won the Weish Cup in eight seasons of previous endeavour, and they make no secret of an ambition to acquire the Schweppes Trooby for their well-stocked showcase. But in the well-stocked showcase. But in the third round at the Arms Park on Saturday an inspired Pontypridd best them by 13 points to six—a margin more comprehensive than it was when the two clubs met up the valley, almost a year ago, at the quarter-final stage.

Mr Trigg was left in no doubt when, six minutes into the second half, he awarded Leicester a dropped good which most of Gloucester, and possibly parts of Lydney, thought had missed. It gave the visitors the lead and visibly disconcerted the Gloucester players, who had dominated possession yet still found themselves a point down at 12-11.
Leicester, living on scraps, gave away too many penalties and conceded too many hard-won pressure positions, enabling Butler to give a precision display of line-kicking which put his young opposite number, Andrew Key, in the shade. Tals was a pity because in all other respects Key, deputy for the international, Hare, had a fine game. He kicked four excellent penalties, positioned himself well and once turbed a Gloucester attack back 90 metres by breaking away from his own line and kicking ahead to force a five-metre strum.
Occasionally Leicester pushed five-metre strum and promptly lost it to an eight-man push. Kenney, following the ball through on the Gloucester side, found himself too advanced and was then obliged to touch down for a five metres scrummage. From this, on the shorter side of a strummage, the Pontypridd full back, Walsh; dropped a nice goal The result looked sealed when Holmes, bursting clear from close to his line, failed to find touch and Swain, on the Pontypridd left whug, set-up a cross-field counter that finished with a try to Rose, buzzing over in the opposite corner, Hazard squeezed a splendid low trajectory conversion over the bar and Cardiff, 8—9, looked done for. Even more so when Hazard lifted a high lick libto the Cardiff twenty-two, which Webber dropped under pressure; David seized the loose ball, blasted onward and finally put in Jones, a finisher, for another try.

Pontypridd's defensive wall was equal on all but one occasion to everything. Cardiff threw at it, at the climax. It was the pace, and nemerative ability of Soun with finne after Lease, a Cadult flanker, and Pomberthy, a Ponty-pridd lock, had collected warnings from the referee, when that official should have instructed the captains to cool things down-from an early stage the Ponty-pridd forwards—with their interpridd forwards—with their inter-national captain, David, calling the shots—were pouring through on Holmes, Cardiff's scrum half, as he sought to cope with in-accurate deflections from his lineout. This was a state of affairs that, if anything, got progres-sively worse from a Cardiff stand-point. Pemberthy, angular veteran in a temped iersey, eave Morgan, sively worse from a Cardin standpoint. Pemberthy, angular veteran in a tamered jersey, gave Morgan, the Pontypridd scrum half, a much more reliable service and the replacement of Shellard by Cooksley, shortly before halftime, provided more height for the visitors at number eight and enabled David to move to his proper position on a flank.
Pontypridd's pack piled into ruck and man! with relish, the whole side tackled to swift and stunning effect. Against such relentless pressure, and with too much bad ball to clean-up, even the Welsh international half backs made some mistakes.
Ironically, it was one of Morgan's few indifferent kicks that led to Pontypridd's first score, hard on the interval.
Cardiff's full back, Webber, got everything Cardiff threw at it at the climax. It was the pace and penetrative ability of Sound, with help from Norster, that sent in the hooker, Watchus, for a my converted by Davies.

London Irish completed their

London merit table programme unbearen, but only just, at Sunbury on Saturday. Richmond held them to a 5-6 draw, all the points being made up of penalty goals. It was a fair result. Such chances as there were of tries were evenly distributed, and neither side could use them;

Although assured sometime ago of winning the table and a place in next year's John Player Cup, the Irish went about their business as if it were still uncartain. Richmond were no less single-minded, and the upshot was a match lacking in some of the finer points, but not in incident or cumulative tension.

Richmond owed their comparative success in the first place to their forwards and in the second to their cover defence. Toely forwards were the equals of the lrish in every sector, and as for their defence, mobody did more to keep it inviolate than the back row of Pearson, Greenwood and Sharp. The right time always found them in the right place. They also designed some useful attacking moves on the fringe of the scrummage in man who mattered was the self-effacing Shacklenn, who read the game like an old book.

The Irish back division looked more danserous or the structure.

scrimmage the man who mattered was the self-effacing Shacklemn, who read the game like an old book.

The Irish back division looked more dangerous on the whole, but failed to do themselves justice. Once or twice Condon wasted good possession by trying to go through on his own instead of letting the ball out. Not was the tactical kicking of the Lrish well directed. Too often they made a gift of the ball to Dick, the Richmond full-back, and he never fumbled.

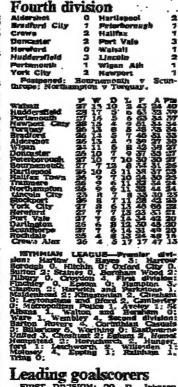

Meanwell kicked two penalties for the Irish and Watkinson two for Richmond. Each of them also hit a post with penalty attempts and two minutes before the end Watkinson missed another, more difficult penalty that probably would have won the match.

The nearest the Irish came to a try was when Meanwell van 70 metres rowards the Kempton Park and and passed to Leopoid, who was tackled by Winder on the Richmond 22. The nearest Richmond came to it was when Hest was stopped on the Irish line and two scrummages followed at the second of which Richmond were penalized. It was a game of many penalties. They were nearly as humorous as Irish jokes.

Why England will not be worried if they are beaten by Australia

From John Woodcock

Sydney, Jan 13. England's place in the finals of the world series triangular one-day competition was guaranteed by vesterday's abandonment in Melbourne, because of torrential rain, of the match between England and West Indies. The single point which this was worth to England has put them beyond Australia's reach, though Australia can still overtake West Indies and so qualify for the final.

The remaining qualifying matches are: Australia v England, in Sydney tomorrow; England v West Indies, in Adelaide on Wed-

seed won the ameteur rackets

A one-day match in Adelaide, probably on a good pitch and in seasonable heat, is so much to the liking of the West Indians that the chances must be of their beating England there on Wednesday. Tomorrow's match between England and Australia looks more open. Although England have won all the three one-day matches the open. Although England have won all the three one-day matches the two sides have played, two of them have been closely contested. Australia are due for a win here, and their two Test victories over England can only have made them more confident of gaining one.

To the Australian Board it could make a difference of many thousands of pounds to have their thousands of pounds to have their own side in the finals. Three matches between England and West Indies (one in Melbourne and one in Sydney) would be West Indies, in Adelaide on Wed. nesday; Australia v West Indies, and one in Sydney) would be bound to draw much smaller crowds than three between England, gained a point from yesterday's abandonment, Australia also benefited from it. Had West Indies beaten England, as they might have been expected to, their two points from winning would have made them much more secure than they are now.

If Australia lose to England and one in Sydney would be bound to draw much smaller crowds than three between England and Australia. England against Australia in Melbourne next Sunday might attract 60,000 people, perhaps more. England against Australia in Sydney on the same ground might bring in 20,000. If that.

Comparable figures for the last two legs in Sydney might be 35,000 and 10,000. This is guess-work but Australian crowds are unashamedly chauvinistic. When Australia met. West Indies in Sydney on Rovember 28 only 6,120 people went to watch. On

In the six and a half weeks that he has been in Australia, Stevenson has bowled only 41 overs. In theory, it should suit England better to meet Australia.

England better to meet Australia in the final than West Indies, outstandingly the most dangeorus of the three sides. If England see it like that, it would suit them better to beat West Indies on Wednesday than Australia tomor-row, though I doubt whether that was a consideration in today's It has been cool and stormy in

England's strength amid foreign weakness

Jill Hammersley, England's top woman table tennis player for many years, could yet change her mind and carry on playing after the end of this season. After her third triumph in the English Open, sponsored by Norwich Union, at Brighton on Saturday, Mrs Hammersley, who is 28, confirmed that she still intends to retire and start a family.

"After 18 years playing table tennis I am set on retiring at the end of this season", she said. "But that could change if I were "But that could change if I were to win the European title again in Switzerland next April. Then I would have to have another think about it". She is the No 1 in Europe and will start top seed and favourite to repeat her victory in 1976.

In the Brighton final she again easily disposed of one of her rivals, Ilona Uhlikova of Czechoslovakia. The championships had the weakest foreign entry for many years, which helped the home domination. For the first time since 1924, England won both singles titles.

Pollardstown to be put on ice for Cheltenham

by Michael Phillips Racing Correspondent Provided that the weather bucks Provided that the weather bucks its ideas up, Sandown Park should be well worth a visit on the first two days of next month. Pollardstown, Sea Pigeon, Rathcontath, Diamond Edge and Spartan Missile are just five of the big names who look like being on parade and for all of them it will be a crucial time as Cheltenham approaches. None more so than Pollardstown who many regard as a horse cap-who many regard as a horse cap-able of winning this year's Cham-pion Hurdle. The first balf of this sesson has gone anything but according to plan as far as Pol-ardstown has been concerned with a bout of coughing, a heavy fall in his only race at Ascot and his next intended race a victim of the weather.

However his trainer Stan Mellor is far from dismayed. In fact he was in particularly good spirits on Saturday evening because Pollardstown had just gone really well in a spin over hurdles at Warwick after racing had finished there earlier in the afternoon. Watched by his owners, Mr and Mrs Bill Tulloch, Pollardstown showed absolutely no Ill effects. they had decided to train Pollards.

Instead Pollardstown will reappear in the Oteley Hurdie at Sandown a week earlier and that is when he could come face to face with Sea Pigeon and Rathconrath for the first time if present plans are adhered to. Mellor intends making sure that Pollardstown is as fresh as he can possibly have him on Champion Hurdie day, not simply because of the race itself but because there are also a number of other valuable races that follow on in the-spring. · Justead Pollardstown will reber of other valuable races that follow on in the spring.

It was, at Cheltenbam last March that Badsworth Boy ran the best race of his hurdling career when he finished third to Pollardstown and Celtic Ryde in the Triumph Hurdle. Those who went to Warwick on Saturday primarily to see Badsworth Boy make a good start to his new life as a steeplechaser were to be disappointed, though. Tony Dickinson's five-year-old jumped the first fence in the back straight Dickinson's five-year-old jumped the first fence in the back straight too well, pitched and crumpled on landing. It was a shame because he had been foot perfect earlier on and appeared to be going extremely well just before his downfall.

What is one person's misfortune is invariably another's lucky break, however, and in this instance it was Bill Smith and Fulke Walwyn who took advantage of the situation to score with Upen Fire. Afterwards Walwyn told me that his Gold Cup hope, Diamond Edge, had come out of his first race of the season at Wincanton two-days earlier really well and that he too was earmarked for a race at Sandown, Walwyn had been toying with the idea of running Diamond Edge again at Kempton Park on Saturday, but he has scrapped that plan because he wants his stable jockey to go to Haydock Park jockey to go to Haydock Park to ride Dramatist in the Embassy Premier Steeplechase final. Spartan Missile, the leading hunter-chaser for the past two sensons, is due to make his seasonal reappearance in the Wilfred Johnstone Hunters Steeplechase at Sandown on February 1. He won the race last year but fell in it the year before. Spartan Missile is thought to be better now than at any time in better now than at any time in his life by his owner and trainer, John Thorne, who intends enter-ing him for both the Gold Cup and the Grand National this back than he did at Newcastle on Saturday when he won the Pintail Steeplechase. For a borse who was reputed to need the race he started at remarkably short odds. Confidence in his ability to win in spite of certain misgivings was duly justified, though, and one was left marvelling, not for the first time, at the skill of bis trainer. Peter Easterby. This was Xing Weasel's first race for more than a year and he has atili never been beaten over fences. None of those races have been beyond those races have been beyond two and a half miles, however, and it remains to be seen whether a horse by Gulf Pearl out of a sound mark mare will last three and a quarter miles around Cheltenham.

Heathrow Airport, London, once again broke almost all its own records in 1979 in spite of Middle East crises, the soaring cost of fuel and fares and a levelling-off of tourism. There is no reason so far discernible to doubt that it will do so again in 1980, even though the British Airports Authority which runs it is now hedging its bet that it would reach maximum passenger capacity in September this year. Some 28m passengers passed through last year, there were 267,000 aircraft transport movements and cargo worth £11,109m was handled. On September 2, 1979, the airport coped with 110,008 passengers in one day (the lowest daily throughput from August 30 to September 3 inclusive was 104,000), another record. Thus Heath-row retained without difficulty its place as the world's busiest international airport, the principal gateway to Britain by a large margin and far and away the leading port in the country in terms of value of cargo. Although the Government recently decided to expand Stansted and a public inquiry into the plan for a second terminal at Garwick is due to start soon, there is no foreseeable possibility that Heathrow will loose its overwhelmingly dominant role as Britain's principal link with the rest of the world. After all, the Government has also given its blessing to the construction of a fourth terminal there, which could be ready in 1984. Like it or not, and most of the inhabitants of west London do not, the airport is an important national asset. It even makes a healthy profit—£34.9m in the last financial year. An airport is like a hospital in that very few spend a minute longer than necessary in either, while most associate both with discomfort and discrimination. The impersonal approach of the staff, the overused facilities, the indifferent food and the streams of strangers under stress add to the analogy. Both belong in the category of necessary evils. The grand scale and the complexity of Heathrow tend to stupefy. It employs 56,000 people, 35,000 of whom work for British Airways, making the airline by far the largest employer of labour on a single site in the kingdom. It occupies 2,819 acres, pumps more than 2m gallons of fuel into aircraft tanks every day and often handles 47 aircraft movements per hour.

Such a complicated and busy place is uniquely vulnerable to disruption as millions know to their cost Labour disputes notwithstanding, most of the delays are not Heathrow's fault. A hitch in air traffic anywhere in the world for whatever reason, from weather to war, can throw Eleathrow out of gear. Considering the sheer effort of orchestration required to get a single aircraft on or off the ground, it is remarkable that the place works relatively smoothly almost every day.

But on the bad days the knock-on effect But on the bad days the knock-on effect of disruptions beyond the control of the British Airports Authority is truly awful to behold. The airport takes on the aspect of a vast refugee camp. Irritability and tension spill over into bad temper or worse, the terminals can hardly cope. traffic builds up all over west London and frustration knows no bounds.

Haggard mothers and whey-faced children who appear not to have slept for days and to have no plans for doing so for some weeks get on each other's nerves and everybody else's. Businessmen climb over each other to cancel appointments in America or Zaire by telephone against a background of general pandemonium. Holidayurakers nurse their expensive tickets and curse the day they first saw the brochure.

None of the setbacks caused by disruption of air treffic can normally be described as tragic (unless of course there has been a crash somewhere); but the minor unhappiness of the individual multiplied by tens of thousands adds up to a formidable sum of human misery in a very confined space, and Heathrow gets rather more than its fair share. The worst combination of all is to be in the long-haul Terminal III on a summer weekend morning when schedules are disrupted. This may be the closest many people will ever come to hell on earth; but many have seen it and lived.

Contrary to popular belief, only a third of passengers using Heathrow are flying on business. Two travellers out of three go there for private reasons—foreign tourists, British bolidaymakers, people visiting relatives and the like. Thus most people is the travellers of the in a state of relatives and the like. Thus most people person can be detained without charge or at Heathrow tend to be in a state of trial for an unlimited period while still abnormal tension, however slight, and same. therefore on a shorter fuse than usual. The last hurdle for the incoming

And three in every five are foreign, which

Heathrow is not so much a community of nomadic insomniacs, a city with no bedrooms, as a double quadrilateral, one bedrooms, as a double quadrilateral, one functional, the other geographical.

It is four airports in one: Terminal I (mainly British Airways short-haul), Terminal II (European short and mediumbaul), Terminal III (long-haul) and the huge Cargo Terminal on the south side.

It is also physically divided into four main areas which have little enough to do with each other. The central area considerations are a consideration of the central area consideration. with each other. The central area consists of the three passenger terminals and administrative buildings like the Queon's Building, as well as the new bus and Underground stations and five car parks. To the east lies the great British Airways maintenance complex, to the south the Cargo Terminal and to the north, on the far side of the A4 trunk road, a large collection of miscellaneous buildings, including the police station and the Custom House, a field full of taxis, an hotel, airline catering buildings and long-

Cynics long since renamed the airport "Thiefrow" and thefts are (meaninglessly) estimated to total at least £5m a year. "You'd be amazed what can fall off the back of a Jumbo", said an airport worker I met in a Hounslow pub. Pilfering is rife; major robberies are rare but usually sensational; international gangs of pickpockets and professional thieves are known to fly in from abroad, loot the terminals of unettended baggage and lift the wallers, cameras and coats of distracted or dis-traught passengers to fly home again the same evening. The capture of the "South American gang" over a year ago led to a sharp, if no doubt temporary, fall in this kind of crime and gave the police a temporary respite.

Policing Heathrow is a curious task. It

Policing Heathrow is a curious task. It takes about 300 officers to do it, plus 50 traffic wardens and even 25 special constables. Armed officers are always among those on duty, and there is a hot line to the Army in case of a terrorist onslaught. But there is no residential population, which means police do not have to deal with domestic disputes, burglaties (there are no houses to burglate). burglaries (there are no houses to burgle). vaudalism. football matches and murder which are their lot in a normal urban

On the other hand, the unparalleled opportunities and temptations for thieves opportunities and temptations for thieves are a large and special problem. Heathrow may seem an impersonal place, a soulless as well as a sleepless town, but the police have successfully operated the "home-best" system at the sirport for four years now. The Cargo and each of the three passenger terminals has its own "village" constable whose job it is to know and be known to the staff.

In keeping with its role as pateway

In keeping with its role as gateway number one, about half the country's immigration officers work at the airport, some 600 in all. The pressure on them is such that they must rely heavily on training and instinct. People use the oddect ruses to get into Britain, which remains an irresistible magnet a vision of paradise on earth, to a surprisingly large number of foreigners everywhere. A Turk claimed entry because he had a British wife.

Unfortunately, he proved unable to recall ther name. The lady in question turned out to be the victim of a bigamous marriage of convenience. A Portuguese claimed political asylum. The immigration service established that he had indeed been harassed by the police, but only Bangledeshi who claimed the right to reside in Britzin drew the attention of an immigration officer because he was walking strangely. It was eventually discovered that this was the very first time he had ever worn shoes.

Countries tend to get the immigration service they deserve. The fact that successive Eritish governments have never quite brought themselves to calling a spade a spade has left the service with the task of interpreting ever more convoluted laws and brought it much opprobrium. Nevertheless it seems decidely odd that private security guards are left in charge of the detention centre at the airport itself for suspected illegal immigrants; and that the back-up facility at Harmondsworth is the only place in the United Kingdom where a passenger is Customs. There than 250 customs officers at Heathrow flike the immigration service, they can claim an enormous increase in productivity because their numbers have remained virtually unchanged as arrivals have leapt), supervised by 34 senior officers. Heathrow's customs officers are among the world's leading experts in the detection of drugs, the most serious problem for the service A woman official noticed that an apparently pregnant passenger was walking wrongly for someone in her con-dition. Instead of leaning backwards as she walked, she inclined forwards. "What have you got there?" the officer asked. "Seven kilos" (of cannabis) was the reply. Heathrow customs officials are regularly consulted by American and other foreign authorities and their lives have been repeatedly threatened by international drug traffickers. The Customs and Excise have their own Queen's Warehouse on the north side where contraband alcohol is poured away down "the Queen's Sewer" and impounded tobacco is incinerated in "the Queen's Pipe" at regular intervals. Heathrow has all the facilities the traveller would expect to find in a place of its size, including shops, banks, bars and restaurants, a medical centre, post offices, a nursery, VIP suites and a quarantine facility which handles a third of a million animals a year.. Less well known is the fact that it also has a chapel, St George's, below ground opposite number two car park.

Two rivers pass through airport land and 21 bird-scarers are fully employed to frighten off the natural winged creatures which can bring down the man-made variety if sucked into let engines

Most surprising of all in some respects
Is to find that Heathrow has its own flourishing social welfare service for the sick, the confused, the lost and the desti-tute "Wel-Care" has been at work for more than seven years and is organized and administered by the Board of Social Responsibility of the Synod of the Church of England under the Diocese of London. It is finenced entirely voluntarily, with no connexion with the state. It is unique in Britain and, at least in scope, in the

It handled 2,300 cases in the last financial year, and business is up a good 25 per cent in the current one so far. It helps passengers (and airport staff to a large degree) with financial problems. depressions, marital problems, addictions bousing difficulties, mental or physical illnesses and travel problems.

Its main role is to act as a doorway to all the public and private social and charitable services in Britain, and its existence and dedication, of which few are aware even now, is one of the most heartening discoveries to be made at Heathrow.

At the other end of the scale is the airport's taxi service. Over the years this has probably poisoned more foreign minds against Britain than any other first impression to which they are likely to be exposed. Things are by no means as bad as they used to be but they are still far worse than they ought to be.

been harassed by the police, but only the best way to deal with a successive because of continually causing obstruction prognathous lout who volubly resents the best mobile greengrocer's stall. A fact that some arrivals have destinations fact that some arrivals have destinations are the second London. The anomaly is that the drivers keep coming back for more work at Heathrow.

All in all, if Heathrow did not exist, it would have been necessary decades and to invent it. Those who suffer from the noise and traffic congestion it causes can do nothing about Britain's geographical position or the fact that it has a hugely overblown, eccentrically sited capital which draws millions of visitors and earns billions in foreign currency.

Victims of the Heathrow blight will feel sorry (though not very) for residents of the Stansted area. The only advice they could give to the members-in-waiting of the society of London aviation victims and allied sufferers is to lie back and think of England.

Liverpool stock exchange £6m scheme

New buildings which replace old ones on prominent urban sites are always in-teresting. Construction has just started in Liverpool on offices on the site of the old Liverpool stock exchange at the corner of Dale Street and Exchange Street East.

scheme is being out by Ulster Pro-of Belfast, with Artagen Properties, a whollyowned subsidiary of Sun Life when completed, in December, 1981, the building will have 78,500 sq ft of offices, seven shops with frontages to Dale Street and Exchange Street East, storage and parking space for 37 cars.

The scheme is costing about f6 milion and will be called Imperial Buildings. The building will consist of six floors over most of the site, rising to 10 storeys in some parts, with a central servicing courtyard clad in russet brick with bronze coloured panels on the upper

A shopping arcade below the building will connect Exchange Street East and Hackins Hey, to form part of pedestrian route from Moorfields Station, on the Merseyrail underground system, to the main office areas. The old building was demolished in 1976, after the exchange was moved.

In Newcastle upon Tyne Broadacre Developments, of York, has started work on the redevelopment of a site in Market Street,

Edmund Kirby and Sons, When completed, in about of Liverpool, designed it and 12 months' time, it will provide about 43,000 sq ft net of open-plan offices. Design is by Geoffrey Purves and Partners, of Newcastle upon Tyne, and the building contract, worth about £1.3m, has gone to John Laing Construction, North-East Region.

In Southend, Haslemere Estates has completed its restoration of Princess Caroline House and 1-2 Royal Terrace, the former Royal Horel. Marketing of the 16,200 sq ft of offices has begun through Healey and Baker with Hair and Sons, of Southend.

The former hotel became famous in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries for the lavishness of its accommodation. In 1977 Haslemere was invited to take an interest in the property by the South-end Preservation Trust and the architects, Rolfe Judd Group Practice.

A deal was agreed with the Southend Borough Council; Haslemere took a lease of 125 years on the properties in return for a ground rent based on a percentage of the

The council also agreed to guarantee a rental to Hasle-mere of £35,000 a year for the first five years for Haslemere's renovation of the properties. The accommodation on offer comprises two smaller units at 1 (1,560 sq ft) and 2 (2,150 sq ft) Royal Terrace; in Princess' Caroline House there is 12,520 sq ft on four upper, ground and lower ground floors. Terms are 25-year leases with five-yearly reviews at rents of about £3.50 a sq ft.

In a recent office transaction Pentax (UK) has acquired the lease on Pritchard House, providing 9,000 sq ft of airconditioned offices, in Northolt Road, South Harrow, Middlesex. The 20-year lease was granted in 1974 with fouryear reviews and the present rent is £60,000 a year. Pritchard Services, the previous owner, has moved to new premises in central London. Jones Lang Wooton and Henry Butcher and Company acted for the assignors and Pentax were advised by Russel Cash and Company. Near Manchester, James Robertson and Son (PM) has

If, as its five accompanying pages of documentation suggest, Jamies Reid intended this piece as a premature elegy for Britain's comprehensive schools, it is the kind of lament that will bring nothing but comfort to grammar school diebards.

Set in the mid-Sixties shortly before the creamers joined battle with the streamers, it tells of the friendship between two 11-year-old boys at a Ken-tish primary school where every day begins with a groaning hymn at the piano from the antiseptic Miss Austen, and continues with team arithmetic and the geographical exploits of Peter and Amanda in their exciting discovery of Peru, while the class are busily pelting each other with the equipment and planning mid-morning raids on the girls' lavatories. "Friendship" is not quite the word for partners' classroom pact. It begins with the aggressively mediocre Alan beating sively mediocre Alan beating up the intelligent and easily intimidated Stephen, who then purchases Alan's tolerance by following him around in assaulting the class idiot, thieving fruit, and scorching the neighbourhood cats with fireworks. The dreaded day of the Eleven-plus arrives: Stephen passes, and Alan is consigned to a secondary modern dump. passes, and Alan is consigned to a secondary modern dump. And when they next meet, separated by their new uniforms with the walls of class visibly growing up around them, it is to go through the motions of a companionship that has a companionship that has already come to an end. This scene is presented as a sad comment on the system that has separated them; but from where I was sitting it seemed that Stephen had had a lucky

Played by children, the piece might have a very different impact. Played as it is by Michael Artenborough's hulking adult cast, it projects the brutalities and callousness of childhood at the expense of any softer qualities. I am not asking softer qualities. I am not asking for a performance that sentimentalizes children; only for one that acknowledges that they are unfinished creatures, and that their options are still open. Much the most interesting performance is Christopher Saul's as the class fool, whose mute misery and rage change to amiable self-confidence once on his woodland home-ground. But in their fixed roles of brainy hanger-on and terror of the back row, Kit Jackson and Joss Buckley excel in graceless subteenage physical mimicry. The age-change doublings, by Mr Saul and Mandy Cuthbert, are very impressive. very impressive.

In a stern rejoiner to my survey of the theatrical Seventies (December 27), Ken Campbell asks me to point out that the audiences for his production of A Hitch-hicker's Guide to the Galaxy were mounted not on roller skates but on airbearings supplied by Rolair UK. Any account of the pest decade should certainly have floating auditorium.

Ancestral voices from the East

The Past We Share: The Near Eastern Ancestry of Western Folk Literature By E. L. Ranelagh (Quartet Books, £10.95)

"There is every reason to believe", wrote Professor H. A. R. Gibb half a cantury ago, "that the modern study of folk-literature will throw fuller light on the diffusion throughout Europe of both materials and technique derived imme-diately from the East". Enter Mr Ranelagh, of the University of Maryland, a well equipped and convincing light-thrower on precisely this subject. He has chosen seven traditional stories, or collections of stories, to illustrate his thesis that the popular literature of Europe derives as much from Arab as from Greek and Latin sources. The seven stories are Joseph and Potiphar's wife. Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, Alexander, Antar and Abla, the Disciplina Ciercialis, the Arabican Sights.

Antur, the sixth century son of an Arabian father and a black slave mother, is as little known in the west as Arthur is in the east, though as continuously occupied in feats of arms on behalf of his beloved, Abla, as any western hero. And incidentally, the Romance of Antar demonstrates how the Christian-Muslim collision of the Crusades left its mark in the east as much as in the west, east as much as in the west, since he was later credited with having fathered Richard Coeur de Lion by a sister of the King of Rome and Godfrey de Boullon by a Frankish princess.

To tell the truth, the exploits of Antar and Abla, which, because they will be unfamiliar to most of his readers, Mr Ranelagh understandably gives greater space to than any of the other seven, are a bit of a bore. Abla shows

The plots of English moralities, like the Taming of the Shrew, or comic songs, like Mr John Blunt ("Get up and bar the door") can be traced far back in time and far away in the company to the faccinating to see back in time and far away in space. It is fascinating to see the national variations put on them through the centuries. The technique of folklore is no less enduring—thus the "frame story", familiar in the Arabian Nights and introduced into Europe via the Disciplina Clericalis in the twelfth century, has been, as Mr Ranelagh points out carried through into something odd indeed.

To begin with, the Deutsche Oper Berlin announced some time ago that for the title role is had engaged the Italian chanteuse who calls herself simply Milva. For reasons of its own the Deutsche Oper, some time after its preliminary announcement, assued a rather tight-lipped bulletin that Milya would appear some time later in another work. I sometimes wonder whether we need quite so many mixed intrumental ensembles specializing in contemporary music, and I wonder so most particularly after a concert like Capricorn's on Saturday night, a largely joyless sequence of five assorted works from the last dozen years. MONDAY BOOK

Paul Griffiths ...

With three more miscellanies of modern music and a dozen more talented performers the Park Lane Group has com-pleted its showcase week for young artists. There has been the occasional dull perform-ance, the odd drab work, but the outstanding impression has been one of vitality and freshness as these young musicians have risen to the demands of the less familiar, whether by Britten or Berio. I hope they retain their openness to the new when they become better known, as many of them surely

The trombonist Mark Hamlyn of course included his instrument's party piece, the Berio Sequenza V, which far out-shone his two brand new works. Even so, Earry Anderson's Sound the Tucket Sonanse and The Note to Mount gave him a chance to show variety of colour and gesture, and Jeffrey Wilson's Pickles, though a laboured cabaret turn, had some charm in this self-mocking performance. performance.

Among the pianists, Jocetyn Abbott and Richard Mapp proved a solid fourhand team, but it was perverse of them to choose only minor works by Britten and Crosse, and a reduction of Stravinsky's Petrushka. Something more stretching might have drawn out imaginations under-employed on this occasion.

Certainiv David Owen Norris

ployed on this occasion.

Certainly David Owen Norris was stimulated by the bold harmony and number magic of Messiaen's Quaire études de rythme, a seminal work heard all too infrequently. Yet too novelty of the music was not the most striking feature in this account: this account: even the sound-ing constellations of the second piece were drawn into fluent lines of musical meaning. Mr Norris dispensed with the crystalline stabs all too common in Messiaen and presented his discoveries within a more rounded but no less dynamic world of sound.

The clarinetist Malcolm Green chose three English pieces from the last 13 years, but they were a varied trio, more varied than he allowed. Davies's Hymnos was 100 sane and dilute, with watery playing by Michael Dussek at the piana, but Mr. Green made piano, but Mr Green made much of the blending of distant purity and human phrasing in a new set of studies by Gordon Crosse, A Year and a Day.

Crosse was the featured composer in these recitals, and the soprano Rebecca Moseley-Morgan chose a song cycle by him along with others by Poulenc and Britten. Her clear, lyrical voice, deftly accom-panied by Bryan Evans, was perfect for expressing the sentimental nostalgia of all three composers, and she showed a sure sense of when to lend a little emphasis.

More extrovert tastes served by the Myrha Saxu-phone Quartet, who squandered their excellence on trite show-pieces from New York and Paris. Dominic Muldowney's lies we forward essay in changing combinations, but it stood out here for its refusal to accept the saxophone as an entertainment instrument only. This athletic quarter deserves more such

Long Voyage Home Cottesloe

Ned Chaillet

A measure of the strength of a repertory theatre is surely the survival of the most successful productions. There must be brave new enterprises as well, but a strong acting ennamble should be able to hold on to and restore its best achievements.

Bill Bryden's company at the Cottesloe, the most consistently rewarding wing of the National Theatre, has demonstrated that strength several times. The return of Eugene O'Neiël's The Long. Long Voyage Home, a tough, rich selection of four of his short seafaring plays, is doubly welcome as the opening of a new O'Neill season.

As before, it sports the evocative setting by Hayden Griffin that provides the illusion of a rocking ship at anchor for The Moon of the Caribbees and unfolds to create the oppressive ship's quarters where a man dies and another man is humiliatingly accused of spying.

Also as before, it is the ensemble playing, the detailed choreography of comradeship, that gives the production its haunting power.

There are some probabilities.

There are some substitutions, but there are no new weak-nesses. One can pick out, again, Jack Shepherd and John Saltbouse, but throughout, and particularly in the chilling last play which finds the sailors at last on land, it is the fine, rhythmic execution of O'Neill's intention that bodes well for the coming season.

John McCabe's Violin Concerto No 2

Violin Concerto No 2 will be given on March 20 by Erich Gruenberg and the City of Birmingham Symphony Orch-estra under Christopher Sea-man. It will be repeated the following night at the Festival Hall in London.

Earlier in the month the orchestra will be making a short tour of Yugoslavia and Austria, playing five concerts, of which the last will be in Vienna. Mr Seaman will conduct the tour with John Lill as duct the tour, with John Lill as the soloist, and the works to be played include Elgar's Symphony No 1 and a Suite for Orchestra by the Austrian composer Kurt Rapf. service of my country 42 years, six months and six days. For most of my life I have there-fore been a member of the honourable mafia of diploma-tists, which is one of the many international mafias that criss-cross the world (bankers, cavalrymen, ministers of agri-culture. clergymen, nuclear sciencists, et al): indeed, one of the best among them, a real society of friends, as no two diplomats hate each other.

For a total of 15 years I have sat at the top, receiving the honours and privileges, as well as the laurels mixed with well as the laureis mixed with thorns, which become to an ambassador. I have liked and disliked this profession, which when I was a boy was still an Order of Chivalry. I have never thought that the right to choose among half a dozen grands cordons to wear over a white west gave me a reason white vest gave me a reason for feeling superior to other human beings. Recently, when some progress was made towards the idea that the scope of diplomacy is not the glory of the Prince and the aggrandicement of his State but the rement of his State, but the peace and welfare of mankind. I felt rather proud of having consecrated to it most of my

I am now quitting what the initiates call The Career, with some regrets for the good things I have not been allowed to do and for some of the opportunities I have missed. I am have emerged in me about the future of The Career they are not attributable to the fact that personally I shall have no part in it. My slowly creeping doubt is that I (and you) may be contemplating the begin-ping of the end of diplomacy: not of diplomacy as an art, which we shall always need with our wife or our boss; but of diplomacy as an institution.

Whether my doubts are founded or not is still controversial. In order to come to a few (provisional) conclusions I shall use the mathematical method called reductio ad absurdum: by it you rest your argument against absurd assumptions and consider what I submit it would not, except in case of crisis. All the Commonwealth heads of state speck English: it would be the easiest thing for Mrs Thacker or Lord Carrington to talk to them directly. And if time were not sufficient for a series of inter-continental conversations, why not a network of red telephones, like the ones which permit ".talk" with the Kremlin? When times are really bad (in case of war, for instance) diplomatic missions are with drawn But the recent drama of the American mission to Tebran should make our leaders reflect whether the presence of an embassy in certain countries is not equivalent to playing with fire. This had been recognized in the Middle Ages and up to the sixteenth and and up to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, when courageous citizers were haurpicked (under the threat of confiscation of their property if they refused) to go as legates on extraordinary missions to the Shab, the Great Mogul or the Emperor of Chius. In a few cases they did not come back, their heads having been severed; but normality was shown in the pictures by Carpaccio in the cycle of the Life of St Ursula, where the ambassadors leave (La Par-tenza degli Ambasciatori) and come back (Il Ritorno degli Ambasciatori).

The lesson of Iran reminds us that the protective wall erected throughout the centuries around the ambassador has been dented in many places. This short analysis seems to lead to the following conclusions. An exchange of embassies between friendly countries is set worst superfluous; between unfriendly countries it has richy. We might is at best risky. We might therefore find our advantage therefore find our advantage in abolishing permanent missions, and replacing them either with a special legate, to be sent for a limited time to re-establish decent relations or to negotiate a special agreement, or with a roving ambassador, when, the consensus of a number of countries is looked for. Having thus made my point

becoming obsolete, the objection might be raised that my analysis is slauted by personal motives. I can distinctly hear my colleagues in London murreuring that, of course, having been ambassador for 15 years (of which nearly five in London) and having only one chance in a thousand of becoming again head of mission, I could not care less if this precious institution were suppressed. To which my answer is: ambassadors are obsolescent and, if things continuous the suppressed that the suppressed is the suppressed to the sup tinue as they are with on the one side prime ministers, foreign and other ministers as well as high officials meeting directly once a month or once a week, and a new middle age emerging on the other side-they will rapidly become obso lete. But a return to sanity is not to be ruled our Perhaps ministers will come to realize that little is to be gained, and a lot might be lost, if the hectic chase after personal contacts at their level is intensified into a frenzied merry-go-round, that will not even be werry after a while; and that relations between countries would be improved and stabilized if they were restored to the patient and continuous care of wise men, members of diplomatic international, not too young not too ambitious, and compensated for the lack of political advancement by some glitter and some duty-free

But my chers collègues, my successor and my younger col-leagues should not anduly worry. Any formal ecceptance of the fact that ambassadors have become needless will take 399 years, even in the first of the two possible developments I have described. # Putting engineers back on top

The Flaniston Report published in the first ten days of 1980 must surely usher in the decade of the engineer.

For Finniston is the most im-For Finniston is the most important report we have had, or are likely to receive, for a very long time. It is concerned with the decline of British industry and how to reverse it. Its analysis of that decline is itself a tour de force, and should be required reading for practically everybody. And it identifies as a central cause of identifies as a central cause of that decline our failure either to develop or to use our quali-lied engineering manpower as

The evidence, overwhelmingly, lies in comparing our arritudes to engineers, and the use we make of them, with the attitudes and practices of other successful industrial countries, On virtually every count we do t worse.
But it is more than that In most other countries the en-gineering profession is seen as lying at the heart, not merely of industry's success, but of the country's success, but of the country's success. It is not so over here, Here, the engineer is seen as an ancillary fellow, available for technical advice, but not to be considered for but not to be considered for determining important management decisions.

On tap, but not on top " in someone's a lumnortal phrase. (Of course there are many and important exceptions, I am writing about the generality.)

Finniston understands this, and that what we need above all else is a change in cultural attitudes. His report is about the process of bringing about that change.

The heart of Finniston is in chapter IV, dealing with the formation of engineers. His proposals will clearly be controversial. But they are based on a cogent analysis of what is re-quired compared with what happens. They seem to me, personally, to be broadly right. I posed inclusion of the Technician Engineer on the Register.

The proposal to introduce statutory registration of engi-neers is also right. It is a measure absolutely necessary if. as Finniston wants, industry is to take engineering qualifications seriously.

The muscle of Finniston's proposals is the Engineering Authority. This is to be the "engine for change". We have long needed one. We have needed a heavyweight organiza-tion to look after the interests of the engineering profession in the nation at large with Government, with the schools internationally.

It must be a powerful body backed by the nation, as Finniston suggests. Without it there is no chance that the majority of Finniston's proposals will be put into practice excess perhaps olecement at a snail's paceand therefore too late.

The Engineers' and Managers' Association has a particular inand is now part of it) which led to the committee being set up by the previous government It was we, with the highest proportion of chartered and technician engineers in menpechnician engineers in membership of any union outside the public service sector, who tabled a motion at the 1976 TUC Congress calling for a government inquiry into the state of the engineering pro-fession, and secured unanimous backing for it there. It was the TUC resolution which led to the government's interest, and decision 10 months later, against the opposition of the CEI and the Civil Service, set up the Finniston Com-

Of course, there are faults to find. For example the report is contradictory when it says "that the new statutory regis-tration must embrace the cur-rent stock of engineers" and then goes on to suggest ways of ensuring that that does not ensuring that that does not happen. To suggest there should now be a great weeding extr-cise before existing chartered and technician engineers are accepted will be entirely counter-productive.
If one thing stands out from the report more than any other, it is the failure of British employers to understand the engineering dimension. It is the emesting dimension. It is the employers who have lacked "suadequate engineering imput to marketing and business planning activities", who spend so much less than their foreign counterparts on R & D activities, who do not recognize their need for engineering expertise," who for engineering expertise", who misemploy and underpay many of the engineers they have got.

These are only a few references to what is unquestionably a damning indictment of so many traditional amployers' attitudes to engineers in this

The question is: can the emis not the only question, but the answer to it will be decisive, more so even than the answer to Finniston which comes from the universities, the institutions and the trace unions. Merely to ask the question is to reinforce th extresty smong argument for a powerful engineering authority to act as the engine of the changes 2.

There will be many criticisms of Finiaston. But all those of us, and there are many, who understand the importance of the engineer to industry, and who are working for this courtry's desperately delayed indutrial revival, must seek to maximize support for Finniston.

It is so easy to destroy good ideas, so difficult to get them accepted. If we start now it will take 10 years to implement Finniston. But what a prize if we can succeed.

As I said at the beginning, this should be the decade of the John Lyons

He further says: "It took the building employers a long time to realize that for so long strike remained loyal to their union, and refrained from doing building work of any kind, their grip was unchallenge-able."

The reason why secondary picketing has increased is really quite simple. The interconnecion and interdependence of companies, industries, and products is such that no one group of workers is involved in a finished article, and to win a dispute, it is necessary to involve all those workers who in one way or another are engaged in the production pro-

Trade unionists rightly get very angry when they receive, from people who have never worked in industry, lectures on the need to be reasonable. It is easy for those outside indusiry to demand why there should be industrial conflict, that surely the interests of employers and workers are similar: so why can't everyone work together in the interests of the company concerned and the country as a whole? Unfortunately, such views ignore the real character of our

To acquire these, they mand higher incomes which inevitably leads to conflict with their employers who resist the claims because they affect profits. In turn the higher incomes gained eventually lead to higher prices, and the whole cycle begins again. What is really required is a new system of production, and an entirely new economic approach, but that will not happen while this Government is in office.

The atmosphere in industry has undoubtedly changed since Mrs Thatcher took control, and has many similarities to that during the Heath regime. At his government, it appeared as if the people, even trade union-

The new American plan was to get Dr Waldheim to visit Iran to try to get the hostages back. Only if he failed would sanctions be imposed. Now it was the Secretary-General's turn to be miffed. Having been asked by the even make things worse. The United Nations is as close to hand as Congress, the Senate and City Hall Security Council debates are broadcast live on public television. This encourages Americans and and their journalists to feel justified in sucering and complaining if it fails to be an effective tool of American foreign policy.

The United Nations has to be somewhere. If it were not here the Americans might ignore it, and who is to say that would not be worse? (I wonder by the way, how the events of the last few weeks would have been effected if its headquarters were in Moscow.)

I imagine that, at the close of these long and frustratist days at the office, Dr Waldheim is given to sitting by the window of his elegant Sutton Place rown house, sipping a bedtime Martini, contemplating the giant church of ice which drift down the East river. If he does, leafing through his abusive cuttings and nursing his bruised amour propre the while, be could be forgiven for wondering whether he might be better loved in Geneva, in Rome, in London, in his home town of

Judging from recent experience of the police's attitude to criticism, or even to the mere expression of concern, their reaction may, unfortunately, exhibit itself in truculent and perhaps intemperate terms. There have, regrettably, been a number of examples of this tendency in the past few months, which even some members of the police service have noted with alarm, as a letter to The Times by Police Inspector Marsden last week demonstrated.

The Police Federation, for example, in its monthly journal Police has described parliamentary concern over deaths in custody as "yet another move in the concerted campaign being waged in certain quarters to stir

Arab Republic. Indeed,

"a campaign of abuse" against the police which had been taken up by the media, some MPs and the usual ragbag of people who spend most of their time in sniping at the police service", Mr James Anderton, Chief Constable of Greater Man-chester, who is today perhaps the country's most energetic, intelligent and controversial police voice on law and order, has divided society into two camps: those who understand the police, and the growing army of motley political activists who "with other perverse responses, roar with disapproval at one single alleged assault by police but remain completely and odiously silent over evidence of a thousand battered policemen." Mr Anderton and many of his colleagues appear to place anyone showing any reservations about police conduct in the latter category.

It is true that there are some who, for political or personal ends, delight in discomforting and undermining the police whenever the opportunity arises. There are also those who, well meant and lacking malice, suffer from an excess of libertarianism which sometimes manifests itself in exaggerated criticism of the police. On the whole, however, the English police have—and deup public anxiety about the reserve—the support, sympathy lations between the police and understanding of the com-

It is not being anti-police to be concerned about the death of people such as Blair Peach, James Kelly, Liddle Towers and anyone else who dies in police custody or in circumstances involving police action; or to be apprehensive about granting the police the additional powers of detention and interrogation that they are asking the Royal Commission on Criminal Procedure to recommend; or to be worried about the operation of the "sus" laws, allowing the police to detain a person on suspicion that a crime is about to be committed, which is having a clearly detrimental effect on relations between blacks and police in South London. Many of those who raise such issues publicly do so not because they are antagonistic towards the police, or are soft on crime, or belong to a militant Trotskyist group, but because, on the contrary, they want to see a respected and effective police force. They are basically friends, not enemies, but the police in their present mood are in some danger of alienating their support. That would not serve the cause of good relations and mutual trust between the police and the community, and it would play into the bands of the mischief makers and those who wish to damage the democratic fabric of our society. The police must learn to be less sensitive to honest criticism, and it is in their own interests to respond more openly to genuine reflections of dis-

SYRIA'S EMBARRASSED SILENCE

Among the chorus of Muslim are still occupying a part of protests against the Soviet Syria.

Another reason could be that Another reason could be that Syria's internal problems have so far prevented her leaders from focusing clearly on the latest international developments; indeed, these problems are of a nature to inhibit rather than encourage any instinctive pan-Islamic response. The party congress was the occasion for a major resuffic of the leadership, and has been followed by the appointment of a new Prime Minister, who is now about to announce his Cabinet. President Assad is well aware that his regime is not popular, and is clearly anxious to give the impression of turning over a new leaf. The domestic section of his speech to the party congress was almost a catalogue of abuses. coupled with injunctions to see that they are corrected. The main grievances concern economic difficulties, widely blamed on corruption in high places, and the arbitrary behaviour of the security forces. Both, in the public mind, are generally associated with the President's brother, Dr Rifaat al-Assad, the commander of the eighteen thousand-strong "special forces" who, however, has been confirmed as a member of the party leadership after (it is said) making a long and emotional speech in his own defence at a pre-congress meeting of party members. The President, it seems, continues to regard his brother as indispensable iously by diplomats resident in Damascus than by journalists based in Berrut. But no one denies that Syria for the last two years has had to cope with a very serious threat to public order in the form of political assassinations occurring almost every week. Most of these are claimed as the work of the clandestine Muslim Brotherhood, but the culprits are seldom apprebended and clearly enjoy at least the passive sympathy of a large part of the population. The victims are almost invariably members of the minority Alawite sect to which President Assad himself and other leading figures in the regime belong, and which is regarded by the more rigorous members of the Sunni majority as not being strictly Muslim.

The Alawites, so-called from their veneration, if not worship, of Ali, the Prophet's son-in-law, are an extreme branch of the Shia. This may partly explain Syria's enthusiastic support for the Shia-led Islamic revolution would reject this sectarian explanation, preferring to stress the value of Iran's conversion to the cause of anti-Zionism. But a third possible explanation is that support for the Iranian revolution is a form of insurance policy against Iranian encouragement of those (mainly Sunni Muslims) who would like an Islamic revolution in Syria. Any such devel-opment would spell disaster not only for the Alawites but also for Syria's substantial Christian minority, and would be a further severe blow to the stability of the region in general.

Mr Benn complained in that interview that his advisers, both civil servants and experts, were unanimous in opposing his prefer-red solution for the nuclear reactor programme and drew from this opposition the conclusion that there was some kind of "state within the state", more powerful than ministers or Parliament.
This conclusion appears unwar-

On matters of social or economic policy, ministers may know as much as their advisers, and are in any case justified in insisting on the execution of their own policies particularly when there is a manifesto commitment; and it is then the duty of civil servants to carry out these politics, whatever their own personal views.

Atomic energy is, of course, entirely different. There can be no question of a manifesto commit-ment as between alternative nuclear reactors. And if expert opinion in this field is unanimous in favour of a particular course, is it likely that a minister, and one without any scientific qualifications, will be right and all the experts wrong? There is a good analogy with military decisions in war time. A more powerful minister than Mr Benn, and one or little pased for modern and one as little noted for modesty, Winston Churchill, always gave in to unanimous military advice when It was opposed to one of his pet

What is quite indefensible, if it really happened, is that Mr Benn's advisers should have concealed from him important facts about nuclear policy, including even the signing of a major contract. But though we cannot excuse this, one can understand it. The temptation to conceal from an unreasonable minister facts which might tend to confirm him in his unreason must have been very strong.

Yours faithfully. WILLIAM HAYTER, Bassetts House Stanton St John, January 10.

Moving up in the world

From Mrs Shirley Robin Letwin Sir, Dr Goldthorpe's great survey into social mobility tells us that Britain is still as class-ridden as before the welfare state. And, in his review of it, Ian Bradley (January 9) finds this "depressing". He would have done better to question Dr Goldthorpe's assumptions—that "skilled manual workers" are at the bottom in Class VI, that "small proportions. the ootiom in Class VI, that "small proprietors, including farmers and self-employed artisans" are in Class IV, and that those at the top, in Class I, are "professionals, administrators, and officials".

The "depressing conclusion" is that few of those born in Class VI or IV are likely to move "up" to Class I. Why on earth should a first farmer want to be reduced to a drone, a pen pusher, a burden on itis fellow countrymen? What is so grand about being an "official"? Why is a good doctor or teacher superior to a good farmer or artisan, or an independent businessman? I suggest that Dr Goldthorpe read Trollope's Rachel Ray, where a lawyer turns brewer, is proud of it. and is praised as a geotleman, to discover what a Victorian novelist thought of such snobbery. Or be might look at Mr Knightley's remarks on the quality of the farmer, Robert Martin, in Jane Austen's Emma.

From Miss Lucinda Broadbent Sir, Ian Bradley's article in today's The Times (January 9) about the Nuffield Social Mobility Survey fails to mention the fact that the survey covers slightly less than half of the population. It studies only the class position of fathers and their sons: it completely ignores women. Does Mr Bradley realise that 40 per cent of the workforce and about half of the school popuand about half of the school population is female? And yet he claims that a survey which excludes all of these people "will lead to a better appreciation of class structure in Britain today", and that it will let us know about the relative inequalities of opportunity in "children's" education and "people's" occupations. It is accurated that he study. tions. It is assumed that by studying only boys and men the researchers can draw conclusions about the whole population, including the women they chose not to study. The sexual inequalities are made invisible. Dr Goëdthorpe is quoted as hoping that his survey will "expose the socially invisible sources of the inequality and prompt politicians to do something about it." How can he hope for this if he denies the enormous inequality between men and women?

Beverage rapport

From Mr Max Owen Sir, The French were wrong to ban the import of English Isato, However, with the ban lifted, their import levy of 70p per kilo is remarkably similar to HM's Customs and Excise's 60p per little levy on imported French wine. Mr Peter Welling does not bene a log to stand Walker does not have a leg to stand on Remove the tax on the imported vane, which is completely contrary to the EEC regulations, and I am sure that the French would respond with equal feirness.

From Lord Beaumont of Whitley Sir. We ought all to be profoundly grateful that Sir Colin Buchanan (January 9) has at last raised the fundamental issues behind all the debates on airports policy in this country.

One of them is the question whether, with the increasing price of oil, there is likely to be any serious increase in tourism in the near future.

Even if the answer to that question is yes, there is yer another question. Has the British Government any absolute duty to supply facilities for more and more people to come to this country regardless of the con-sequences in terms of the cost of building airports and the disamenitles caused to our citizens whether they live near the airports or suffer in other ways.

I do not say that the answers to these questions are obvious. I merely suggest that they have hardly been raised and that before we do anything drastic they should be answered convincingly. The "great debate" about where the third or fourth London sirport should be has effectually masked the much more important debate as to whether this country needs or wants any more air traffic. From Miss Joyce Quin, Member of the European Parliament for Tyne & Wear South (Labour) Sir, I am glad to see that Professor Sir Colin Buchanan (January 9) has expressed publicly doubts about the value of providing a third major airport for London. Invasion of Afghanistan From Lord Stewart of Fulham, CH,

Sir, While Russlan troops swarm over Afghanistan, America's allies, to our regret, do not seem to demonstrate the sense of crisis and urgency so vital at this crucial juncture in post-war history. It is astooishing that, while countries like France and Germany and other Nato and European Community members continue to condemn the Soviet invasion, there is no indication so far that they are ready to give outright support to President Carter's use of trade, financial and economic sanctions against the Soviet Union.

Thus, France is finding highfalutin' reasons to go its own narrow way and Chancellor Schmidt is reported to have said in Madrid several days ago that the West should maintain a dialogue with the Soviet Union and that he had no plan to recommend any

If mere words of condemnation or vectal outrage are all that America's allies are prepared to show in support of Carter's new-found leadership then sad days may indeed be shead for all those who cherish the ideals of the free world.

May we, in this connexion, also point out that if the Western world remains paralysed when confronted with naked aggression in a country with naked aggression in a country traditionally outside the Soviet's sphere of influence, how can Yugoslavia or Romania, for example, ever expect help if the day comes when Moscow decides that its interests are "threatened" in these two countries? A failure of will and common purpose to act resolutely now, irrespective of adverse economic consequences, could not but lead to tragedy for all of us. It would seem, therefore, to be in our individual and collective interest that Soviet imperialist aggression be met with stern retri-bution and a willingness to bear the pain and sacrifice it might well entail. This is no time for "busi-ness as usual". The price of further violation needs to be marked prohibitively high; otherwise there will be no future for freedom. Yours faithfully. STEWART OF FULHAM. JOSEPH GODSON. Dispute at Covent Garden

Louis Rutland

Sir, It is not always wise to air one's differences in public, but, as Sir John Tooley (January 8) has chosen to comment on the pay dispute at the Royal Opera House perhaps two representatives of the orchestra, closely involved in the negotiations, might be permitted the right of reply.

Sir John appears to believe that performances are being adversely affected by the orchestra's ben on Saturday rehearsals. If this is so, the management of the Royal Opera-House must accept some responsi-bility. The ban was imposed by the orchestra early in October and there has been ample time to reschedule rehearsals to ensure that current and future performances are adequately rehearsed. In any case, a professional orchestra is expected to cope with contingencies more bazardous than the loss of a rehearsal and it must be borne in mind that the contribution the orchestra players make is not con-fined to the scheduled rehearsals and performances.

This ban was brought in by the orchestra for two purposes: firstly reference to a five day week is mis-leading, more misleading than the error in William Mann's article (January 2) which Sir John's letter (January 2) which Sir John's letter sought to correct.

The big error which Sir John allowed to pass uncorrected was the reference to a lost dress rehearsal, Although it is true that one rehearsal with orchestra was lost for Traviata, the dress rehearsal, in fact, was not lost but was rescheduled at short notice with the cooperation of the Musicape Union.

ence; secondly to emphasize the orchestra's contention of many years' standing, that Saturday rehearsals should be reduced in

Living in China

From Mr Michael de Havilland Sir, Your correspondent's report of that foreigners in China are living under gheuto-like conditions. This is slightly misleading, if I may say so.

While this is certainly the state of things at Peking, which I myself experienced while there, it most certainly does not apply elsewhere in the People's Republic. Indeed, here in Shanghai we all enjoy the total freedom of the city, which is right on the doorsteps of our hotels and clubs. We are allowed to eat either in our own establishments or we can go "on the street" where there are endless eating houses. I can assure you that there are no "grumbles" from any Euro-pean or American specialists living outside Peking, where, I feel, hotels are not so favourably situated in the very heart of the city as they are here.

Heraldic dogs

From Slains Pursuivant of Arms Sir, As the Pursuivant of Arms who acted for the South of Scotland German Shepherd Dog and all Breeds Training Club may I set Mr Maxtone Graham's mind at rest (letter, January 4) and put right the record.

The correct blazon of the arms granted is: Azure, a German Shepherd Dog in the show stance proper. In chief between two plates, two retrieving objects in saltire argent. Retrieving objects are like bones and with the two balls (plates) reflect the obedience training aspects of the club, whose Scottish origin is noted in the saltire form.

From Mr Robin M. White Sir. The reports and correspondence that you have published concerning a race or ethnic origin question in the 1981 Census (December 8, 17, 31; January 3, 8) have largely addressed themselves to the desirability of such a question. Thus they tend to assume that a sensible question on the matter could be asked.

This may be doubted. The question proposed by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys are ambiguous and overlapping but far from exhaustive. Criteria of colour, ancestral convexion, citizenship and religion are oddly mixed. The problems thus created are not simply ones of bad drafting, and assertions that difficulties arise because of a confusion vermeen "race" and "colour" beg the question of what we mean him to the problems of the colour of the colour state. race" (or for that matter "ethnic origin ").

The point is most clearly man? The point is most clearly man? by reference to an American study by Johnson published by the 175 Bureau of the Census in 1974 entitled Consistency of Reporting of Ethnic Origin in the Current Population Survey. Here it was found that only about 65 per cent of the US population gave themselves the same racial or ethnic designation on dates separated by only a year. In other words, about one third of the other words, about one third of the US population "changed race" annually! The rate of change varied with the designation to which a person allotted himself on either person allotted himself on elther occasion. Some rates of change were low, "black" showing a consistency of over 90 per cent. Others were very high, "Irish" showing little over 50 per cent consistency.

Clearly consistency of reply will rary with the actual question asked, and with the racial or ethnic composition of the requisition cuestion.

Access to Public Records From Mrs Meriel Lucas

Sweet charity From Mr J. R. Pater

Sir, I am somewhat puzzled by your Sir, I am somewhat puzzled by your report (January 7) of Mrs Thatcher's references to the Good Samaritan in her weekend interview. My understanding of the story is that the Good Samaritan needed no monetary incentiva to help the injured man; indeed, he gave money away unnecessarily.

It could be argued that, to give him incentives to act like this, his tex rates should have been higher, thus entitling him to a greater tax rebate on monies given to charity Except, of course, that he would have needed to covenant seven years of giving, if the tax rules had been such as they are in this country. Clearly, to resuscitate the economy we need higher tax rates and revised tax rules on monies given to charity. Yours sincerely.

Taking a leaf from the Castle diaries

January 12, Sat : Woken early by January 12, Sat: Woken early by the telephone. It is just not my day. My colleague Eric Jacobs, of The Sunday Times, puts the question, and another voice probably belonged to Michael [Jones, Political Correspondent] is in the background helpfully prompting. Can I remember what I wrote on June 24, 1962 in The Times? It is embar-1968, in The Times? It is embarrassment perhaps that causes him twice to address me as Godfrey, but he may have a motive. These professional scavengers of the press show no respect for personal privacy, although, much as I suspect a conspiracy, it seems wise to be polite and respond to his flattery.

Why June 24, 1968? Apparently Barbara's [Mrs Barbara Castle, in 1968, First Secretary at Employment diaries are being prepared for publication tomorrow and she refers to something I printed on that date. The article upset Harold [Harold Wilson, Prime Minister in 1968], who brooded over it and complained that he could not let a single remark drop in Cabinet "without their using it against

Evidently the piece amounted to a nearly treasonable leak of a Cabinet discussion that could well have affected the highest national interest, but I cannot for the life of me recall offband what I wrote. The voice in the background suggested that it probably had to do with Cabinet dissensions on supplying arms to South Africa; a theory that I could then neither confirm nor deny. At any rate, Barbara's diary leaves no doubt that she felt betrayed. She had passed on the Prime Minister's remark at hunch to The Times building, and it never crossed her mind that the words would be printed. Wood's compliments about Barbara's vivacity and turn-out caused her to lower her ed Legis guard. To coin a phrase, flattery will get you everywhere.

Reflecting on Eric [Jacob's] telsphone call, I realized that I must arm myself with an explanation immediately if my character as a champion of women's place in poli-tics is not to suffer serious injury. What did the article say on Mon-day, June 24, 1968? I called my entire staff of secretaries and sides from the kitchen, and she carried out an investigation of the Cabinet leak with a thoroughness that would have commanded the full approval have commanded the full approval of Sir Harold [Wilson] and Barbara herself. In a drawer, beneath some shirts and socks, lay the evidence: a custing from The Times, clearly marked with the crucial date, and headed. "Charge of broken promises and effect on workers" vote". On the right-hand side was a head and shoulders photograph of the author, looking every bit the kind of scavenger who expects to get everywhere enger who expects to get everywhere by flattery. No wonder Harold Wilson brooded upon the article and told Barbara [Castle] that next day he would once again lecture the Cabinet on once again tecture me capmer on leaks. Here are the relevant lines:

". This is the season of the year when senior ministers turn their minds to planning the Queen's Speech for the session opening next autumn. The process of culling from the departmental prospectuses of Bills has just begun, and from a discussion in the Cabinet room comes the echo of a fragmentary exchange between Mr Wilson and a senior minister that speaks volbe electorally popular?, the senior minister asked. Mr Wilson's answer, whether cynical or despairing showed how the iron enters his soul when Labour loses one stronghold after another in by-elections, and when the opinion polls reveal mass desertions from the faith. 'Is anything electorally popular', he

"By all accounts, the exchange ended at that point presumably with Mr Wilson and his colleagues silently reflecting on man's ingratitude to governments. But in those few words everything is implied: a Prime Minister and a Cabinet who have almost lost hope that they will ever be given some grudging credit for what they have done to keep the pledges they made to the electorate in 1964 and 1966, and who are more hurt when they feel wronged by their friends than when they are persecuted by their enemies. . . As they feed the legislative conveyor belt year in, year out, nothing makes Cabinet ministers despair more than the insistent accusation from the Labour rank and file that Mr Wilson's Government is as much like any Tory government as two peas in a pod."

From that point on, the article interpreted an opinion poll commissioned by The Times from Marphan before a Sheffield by-election, which showed the workingclass vote swinging heavily against Labour. Replies made to Marplan interviewers were devastatingly

The lesson for me of the Eric Jacob's telephone call and the serialization by The Sunday Times of the Barbara diaries, especially after some of the curiously improbable references to me in the Crossman diaries, is that I must be in leasing a diary marself or chart. begin keeping a diary myself so that I may check instantly any revelation that I put a government in peril or caused a Prime Minister to have a sleepless night.

Yet how strange that Barbara, a political journalist married to a journalist, should show so little understanding of her trade the moment she becomes a minister. It behoves me without delay to check on her account of an incident in 1969, when her private secretary rang me to say that Barbara had noted we had not taken luncheon together for some time. She chose a day Cabinet would be meeting, and for her convenience I booked a table at St Ermin's Hotel, There, over a nice meal and two good bottles of Meursault, she broke the news that Harold [Wilson] and she were surrendering completely on "In place of strife" and that there would be no legislation.

On some occasions she distrusted my motives; now and then, as at St Ermin's, I distrusted hers. Why had she chosen me for this precious confidence that "In place of strife" had gone into the Whitehall shredder? I am sorry to reflect that I suspected that The Times was being had, and I made the minimum of it. The news the Cabinet, the Parliamentary Labour Party, and TUC waited for was softened down, and the story very nearly got away. We can all be too suspicious.

His remarks were given point by Mr Jim Baker, the secretary of Rhodesia's Ministry of Commerce and Industry, a civil servant to whom ministerial powers have been delegated until next month's elections.

Mr Baker said: "British goods have been coming in from third parties but they haven't exactly been promoted."

What these goods are is hard to ascertain. Despite the presence in Salisbury of Lord Soames, the British Governor, the visiting journalist is still cautioned by the Muzorewa government that "it is an offence to refer to methods. offence to refer . . . to methods of sanctions circumvention." However, as can be seen in any Salisbury shop, Rhodesia is now self-sufficient in most consumer goods.

It would be surprising, therefore, if these unofficial exports were not of those items listed by Mr Baker, Mr Stringer and then by Mr Moorfoot in a state-ment released here and in London-that is, capital goods and particularly replacement mach-inery and plant.

From conversations with Rhodesian businessmen and officials it is clear that the reason more such goods have not been sold here is not because of sanctions. Shortage of foreign currency resulting from the 1974 oil price increases and the pressures of wer spending

Manufacturers fear a down turn in market for big executive cars as discounts and offers spread

to fall by 12 per cent this year from the 1979 record of 1.7 million there is speculation over which sectors will suffer most. More petrol price increases and the spectre of further taxation of business cars support the view that the most profitable luxury end of the market will be the worst hit. However, some observers believe that the slowdown in executive car sales, which has of sales, been increasingly apparent over the past months, will halt and those people accustomed series. D to driving Jaguars or Mercedes, mostly at their companies' expense, will not wish to "trade down". Evidence of the downturn can be seen at the Ford plant at Cologne, West Germany, which produces Capris and Granadas and which has been Granadas and which has been at a standstill for six of the past 13 weeks, and at BL's Rover plant in Solibul, Birmingham, which is now operating a four-day week.

BL said the shorter week had have incriminal to save money. been instituted to save money. to ease the conversion of the plant's third assembly track to produce the TR7 sports car in March, and because Rover stocks "may be high for the forecast market for 1980." BL believes that although the executive market is showing little change, there is a tendency for former buyers of Jaguars and big Rovers to prefer the less thirsty Rover 2.3 and 2.6, which have been selling well, and Princess models.

Latest estimates from the industry are that in the middle car range, which includes the Maxi, Princess, Capri, Granada and the bigger Talbots, demand this year will fall by 20 per cent on last year to about 230,000, a much bigger decline that that expected for the total market However on a market share basis the decrease will not be so severe. These cars took 16.4 per cent of the total United Kingdom market in 1974, rising to 17.1 per cent in 1979 and this year the sector should account for about 15.9 per cent The class which includes the smaller Rovers, the BMW 5 series, Datsun 26-2800, Toyota Crown, Volvo 244-245 and Mercedes 200-300, is expected to show a fall in demand of 21 to 22 per cent to about 55,000. But the market share will decrease only The worst affected, therefore, are most likely to be the big-engined models such as the most expensive BMWs, Mercedes, and Jaguars.

Last year's car sales, the buoyancy of which con-founded most forecasts, show that in the top executive sector, imported models did better than the domestic products, particularly BL's prestige cars. Jaguar sales plummeted by 38.6 per cent from 10,982 in and road haulage strike of last year and BL production prob-lems outside Jaguar contributed to low output.

Rover sales were also hit by a shortage of cars early in the year caused by strikes includ-ing a major dispute at the Rover plant. The year's sales of 29,756 were down on 1978 by nearly 6 per cent. Sales of German-built Ford

US slump 'will not be severe'

Bank economists are not generally held in high esteem along Wall Street; they have been wrong too often. But Dr Gary Wenglowski is a notable exception, he enjoys a solid reputation for thorough, commonsense, analysis and his reports are influential. His latest forecast predicts "a very mild decline in business activity dur-ing the next six months".

Dr Wenglowski is a partner at Goldman, Sachs and Co and director of economic research. The long-heralded American recession has still not arrived, but Dr Wenglowski says it is coming. But it is "stagflation" per cent range. However, as in previous years, claims are proving to be a poor guide to the final level of settlements. rather than a severe slump that will typify the American economy in 1980.

According to Dr Wenglowski the rate of inflation between the end of 1979 and the end of 1980 will be 11 per cent. He sees the wall be inderating slightly as the year progresses, but he leaves little doubt that inflation will recession some time ago and some expected the United States to be in the middle of a severe alump. Few experts have managed to explain convinc-ingly why reduced savings, high personal debts, record high in-terest rates and cruel inflation rates did not combine to undermine consumer spending and business outlays and cause a slump in 1979.

Dr Menglowski's explanation is that people still have little incentive to save, but considerable incentive to borrow and spend. He notes that "virtually no fixed-return financial asset presently yields a positive and real, after-tax return to savers, because of the debilitating interaction of high inflation and the present excessive taxation of financial investment returns. My memories, however, are 10 years old, and I am assured that things have changed a great dead since then.

In one respect the change is evident in the figures. Many more graduates now go into industry and commerce. Of course, there are various reasons for the change — the decline in the status of compering occupations (teaching being on obvious example); increased expertise in industrial and commercial companies in giving graduates jobs they want to do; and money.

Among those reasons, how-ever, some weight should almost certainly be given to the foundation, a decade ago, of the Standing Conference of Employers of Graduates and its cooperation with the National Union of Students and the Association of Graduate Association of Graduate Careers Advisor y Services, in establishing a code of conduct for members. This code is now being revised, for the first time since it was written; and its revision in part reflects some interesting developments in the recruitment of graduates.

If this experiment proves to be a success (and there is no reason to suppose that bright undergraduates are any less swayed by the glamour and growth prospects of the vigorous small company, than, say, their older brethren in the City), then there is obviously a role for the commercial agency in the business of graduate recruitment—and for the graduate in the small company. Among the proposed amendments to the law on unfair dismissal, clause 5 imposes a statutory duty on tribunals deciding whether or not a dismissal, one welfar to not a dismissal. missal was unfair, to take into account the size and administrative resources of the employer In practice, however, tribunals should be doing that already. Once the employer has shown what the reason for dismissal was, clause 5 also relieves him of the burden of then showing that he acted reasonably. A tribunal will still have to decide whether he was reasonable or not, but he does not himself have to set out to prove it. New firms, with fewer than

Why onshore exploration has been so slow-moving in Britain

Kingsley Dunham suggest (Letters, January 9), that the nationalization without compensation by the Conservative Government in 1934 of undiscounted by the Conservative Covernment in 1934 of undiscounted by the covernment of Government in 1934 of under-covered hydrocarbons has been successful in encouraging ex-ploration for oil and gas on land in the United Kingdom. They advocate the nationalization of undiscovered minerals. In fact, experience since 1934 demon-strates the opposite.

The United Kingdom contains 89,000 square miles of land of which a very major part com-prises sedimentary basins with potential for commercial hydro-carbons. Since 1934 a mere 362 exploration and appraisal wells have been drilled and these have resulted in the discovery of only a relatively small number of scattered fields which together produce currently a total of about 2,700 barrels per day. And of this, some 40 per cent comes from one field, namely Wytch Farm. Total onshore production therefore stands at a rate of 0.17 per cent of the production rate from offshore. Similar areas in the United Small businesses should find members of the Government who think that the present law is too heavily weighted in fav-our of the emologee. In cer-tain cases members of the judciary (and not only Lord Denning) appear to think so For example, there was recently a case before the Em-ployment Appeal Tribunal: O'Hare v Rotaprint Ltd (Times Law Report November 21). Law Report, November 21). The question was whether or not two employees had been unfairly dismissed in respect of an alleged redundancy.

It is important to realize that an employee may be made redundant and yet be unfairly dismissed. For example, he may be dismissed in breach of an agreed redundancy procedure.

Rotaprint had decide to increase production, in the hope that sales would rise, so extra labour was taken on. Unfortunately, the expected increase in sales never materialized because the product coat too much. The management therefore decided to reduce the workforce by 10 per cent. They didn't intend to reduce output, but only the

Falklands oil: need for a cautious approach

From Lord Shackleton and others Sir. By injecting controversy and speculation into his article of December 17 on Oil in the Falklands, your correspondent, Michael Frenchman, not only gives a misleading picture on the current situation, but more importantly does not pay informed regard to the true in-terests of the Falkland Islanders themselves. We would like to ser the record straight on a few points. First, there is no justification.

tor postulating at this stage the size of possible hydrocarbon deposits in the Malvinas sedi-mentary basin between the Islands and the Argentinian mainland. The results of the recent seismic surveys indicate only that in some areas the structure and size of the sedimentary section are such as to justify proceeding to the next stage of exploration—ie drilling.
As recent disappointing exploration off the east coast of the United States has shown, until drilling has taken place, it is quite impossible to put forward any credible estimates, of possible oil reserves for the offshore area of the Falklands. All responsible professional opinion would reject the esti-mates in the 1975 Geological Survey to which your corres-pondent refers, based as they were en a series of quite un-sustainable hypothetical as-summing. sumptions.

Secondly, contrary to the claims of consultants quoted by Mr Frenchman, although the servicing of any offshore drilling activity in the Mal-vinas Basin may be most con-veniently conducted from the Falklands, it does not have to take place from the Islands. The major consideration in deciding to what degree such activity should be based there. and how it would be operated must be the subject for a difficult and sensitive judgement on the part of the Islanders. From the 1976 Economic Survey Report and from other enquirles they are mostly well aware of the impact which oil exploration and production activities has had on the residual industries of Shetland and these islands have a native population of 17,000 compared with the 1,900 in the Falklands. We would therefore strongly urge a caurious approach by United Kingdom and Falk land Island governments to offshore oil exploration. Speculation of the kind indulged in Mr Frenchman's article can only further unsettle a com-munity already disturbed by years of political and economic uncertainty. Yours, etc.

Financial needs of the BSC From Mrs J. Cohen

SIr, Civil servants do not usually reply to letters in the press about matters within their fields of responsibility, but as the assistant secretary responsible for British Steel Corporation finances I feel bound to correct a factual error in the letter from Mr E. H. Woolf published in your columns on January 10.

Prior to April, 1978, the BSC was financed by a mixture of loans and equity capital, and there was a requirement that this equity capital should be remunerated at a rate not less than that which would have been payable on the National Loans Fund foars. However, since April, 1978, all the corporation's external financial requirements (other than short-term) have been met by subscriptions of capital under section 18(1) of the under section 18(1) of the Iron and Steel Act, 1975. £1,505m has been subscribed since April, 1978, and none of this carries any interest. The corporation will only be required to pay dividends on this money after a capital reconstruction, as set out in the White Paper of March 1978 (Cmnd) 7149). Yours faithfully. ## involving the company's workforce

From Mr Roy Eurnshow Sir, Mr Colin Minton's letter (letters, January 7) makes a lot of sense.

The Export Year campaign and its successor. Export United, have been encouraging companies to spend more time in efforts to find ways and means to inform and involve all members of the workforce. The main sponsors are the CBI, the TUC and the Association of British Chambers of Commerce —who seem to find themselves in complete agreement on this subject.

We have been concentrating on exports in these campaigns, simply because our balance of payments looms so large amongst our economic problends. The principles we have been advocating, however, apply equally to all aspects of industry and commerce.

Although progress has been slow, my close involvement in both campaigns has encouraged me to feel that there exists strong conviction in the minds of many on both sides that there or many on both sides that there is real hope of avoiding the much-feared economic cate-strophe if we can really come to grips with this problem. Much has already been achieved, but it is vital that more boardrooms do exactly what Colin Minton suggest, and handle the cuestion as one handle the Question as one equal in importance to, say, investment, product and market developments and acquisitions.

From Mr M. Hopkins
Sir, While we can only speculate on the future uses and abuses of the Employment Bill when it becomes an Act, I would like to make an amendment to Mr Sansom's interpretation of Clause 6 (January 4) hut in agreeing with the interpretation in relation to The Times report of December 20.

The Tories have been consistent critics of One wonders The Tories have been consistent critics of stamp duty on house purchase. One wonders whether political expediency—in this case the need for tax revenues (stamp duty yields something over £400m), in the face of the apparently widening public sector borrowing requirement—will again overcome principles.

"The clearing banks, who would circumvent such a request at their peril, have been particularly critical at the competitive disadvantage this puts them in compared with foreign banks in Lonron, who in the case of the American banks at least have been whittling away the clearers' corporate share in recent years.

Second, the Bank of England has issued guidelines to the banking system about what its prudent foreign exchange exposure should be. Some of the clearning banks at least feel these are unduly restrictive especially when the yare supposed to enjoy complete freedom in the management of their currency holdings.

Then last week there was the Inland Revenue's change of direction in not allowing United Kingdom companies borrowing in the Eurobond market to pay interest gross of tax. The Revenue's argument that it is a nonsense to allew one United Kingdom resident to pay interest gross to

No doubt the revenue was more influenced by the fact that Eurobonds are in bearer form where there is no record of ownership and interest payments difficult to trace. But the net result is that foreign borrowing by United Kingdom companies, which exchange control removal was sup-posed to encourage, will be more expensive if overseas finance companies have to be set up while British investors can go on buying non-sterling Eurobonds on exactly the same

"Insider" laws

Legislation on insider dealing has been under consideration for the best part of a decade: but in the event it looks like making its way onto the statute book in something of a rush. Detailed legislative proposals were published only a couple of weeks before the Companies Bill itself; and though they were in substance little different from the proposals put forward in the White Paper in July 1978, this harum scarum procedure has given rise to a certain amount of tuttutting in the more chaste recesses of the legal world.

That said, there has been no significant criticism of the drafting: the controversy, insofar as it continues, still hinges on the Bill's intent. There are two drawbacks to the insider dealing clauses as they stand. The first is almost certainly endemic to any proposals to tackle this problem by way of prosecution after the offence: namely, that a fair amount incidental damage is caused whenever a hammer is taken to crack a nut.

Some of that damage has been foreseen, Hence the Stock Exchange representationsreflected in the legislation now before Parliament—on the role of jobbers and investment analysts.

In one particular respect, the proposed legislation could have effects directly contrary to Government intentions in other areas. Because not only directors, but also all other employees, are liable to prosecution if they deal on price-sensitive informationand the onus is on them to prove that they If they were subject to witholding tax, did not know it—participation by employees in the ownership of their companies is country depending on double-taxation almost certainly going to be a trickier business henceforth. The problem could, of course, be side-stepped, by a decision to apply the Stock Exchange guidelines on the "safe" periods for dealing; but the net effect of such restrictions will still be to make shares in the companies they work for less attractive to employees. It is, of course, unlikely that there will be any threat to the share dealing of the great majority of employees. Experience abroad suggests that prosecutions under insider dealing legislation are almost invariably confined to the high earners; and there would obviously be practical difficul-ties in monitoring the dealings, never mind the intentions, of the whole of a workforce.

But then, that takes us to problem number two: can (and will) this legislation be enforced? And is there any point in baying it on the statute book if it turns out, like the litter laws, to be a dead letter?

It could be, as Dr Barry Rider of the Institute of Securities Laws suggests (and as American practice requires), that the best way to tackle the abuse of privileged information, is not to prosecute those who perpetrate the abuse, but to spread the information in the first place.

tion from its planned start in January 1982, it can only be financed either at the cost of considerable loss of revenue to the Exchequer or the establishment of a system which threatens the companies of ITV 1 and, ultimately, the BBC.

There is one additional choice for the Government and that is to postpone establishment of the channel until happier times. This is not inconceivable despite the Home Office's insistence that a Fourth Channel Bill will be published in February.

It is perfectly feasible for the Home Secretary to outline his ideas for the running of the channel in such a Bill and then leave a date for its formation until some unspecified time in the future.

What has brought the fourth channel question so swiftly to a head within the Cabinet is the sudden realization that it will prove a costly exercise and one which may prove hard to justify in the light of other government economies.

Public cost

The Conservative Government when it came to power last year quickly overturned Labour's plans for an Open Broadcasting Authority and decided to hand the fourth channel over to independent relevision.

Such a decision was only to be expected in the light of the Government's dislike of state institutions. But all that now looks shaky in the face of a prag-matic assessment of the public cost of the new channel. True, it will receive no public funds and will be financed solely from the revenues of the independeur companies under the proposels of the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

What has become in-creasingly clear, however, is that such a method of financing will drastically affect the amount of levy paid by the companies to the Exchequer.

The Government, which last year received £69m in levy, could lose substantially. Faced with that kind of prospect, the Prime Minister must be expected to question whether a new television channel should remain one of the country's priorities.

The other alternative is to

What she had in mind seemed to parallel the Department of Trade's present proposals to give dispensation from full auditing requirements to small proprietary companies. Others would prefer that the nature of the offence rather than the size of business committing it should decide into which court of law it should

This situation results from the contracted out employers and employees having to pay an extra 2.65 per cent in the contribution rate on the first £23 of weekly pay and receiving a rebate of only 4.35 per cent (7 per cent less 2.65 per cent) in the contribution rate on pay between £23 and £165 a week. Could it be that they find them-selves in this unhappy position because their experts failed to tell them about the self-inflict-ture about the scheme. As already indicated, the Govcriment Actuary's 1975 assess-ment made it plain that there would be no pay-off within the next 30 years. On the prospects thereafter only the silence is eloguent. The Government, in its desire and to invigorate the private sector, will presumably consider early amendment of the scheme to eli inste the burdens that contracting out now imposes. Short of this, it could save the contracted in companies and the Treasury half the present extra cost that falls on them by requiring all public sector bodies to stop contracting out of the state scheme and to emulate companies such as BAT Industries, GEC, Glaxo and RTZ, which contracted in and modified their own schemes accordingly.

Loud and influential voices would, of course, be raised against any such changes, and the contracted in employers who are being taxed so unjustly and unnecessarily by their con-tracted out brethren would be unwise to remain idle and uncomplaining. One thing they could do would be to form an Association of Contracted in Employers to promote a wider understanding of the state scheme's financial implications and to campaign for its early reform.

Such an association would speak for most of the nation's wealth producing companies and their employees; it would aim to lighten the load that the new scheme had heaped upon the unsuspecting taxpayer's weary back; and it would be a much-needed friend to those who believed, despite the Government Actuary's warning on prospec-tive contribution rates, that contracting out could be a viable option.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND MARKET REPORTS

To a few people the power of prophesy may be given. To even fewer is given the capacity for recognizing the realization of a prophesy. Thus the champions of gold are still bemused by the response to their predictions. Speculation there certainly is. But are we also witnessing an entirely new phase in the history of gold? Will we look back on the recent period as one in which the market established itself on a permanently birther plane?

Not without hesitation, investors in gold mines appear to be supporting the latter view. Over the last month the metal bas risen about 46 per cent, but the average increase in the price of South African gold shares is only about 25 per cent.
While gold fell below $600, rose again, then repeated the process, investors hung back. But by the end of last week surging demand in the sector suggested that the mines were regarded as fundamentally underpriced in relation to gold.

An immediate enticement is obviously the March and April results.

Mining

The market is talking of an average gold price for this quarter of as much as $650. Certainly, $550 looks realistic, and at that price the sector's average yield would be 26 per cent. So If one takes 20 per cent as the historical rating for South African mines, most of the shares still look pretty cheap. The December results from Consolidated Gold Fields' mines make the point. Profits rose strongly on the back of a received gold price up 27.7 per cent to almost $400. The impact on the high quality mines such as West Driefontein and Kloof was spectacular: West Dries's profit increased from R87.3m to R114m, and Kloof's working profit went up from R48.5m in the previous quarter to R65.3m. These sorts of results will doubtless be duplicated at the end of the current quarter. It is indeed a good time for Deelkraal, Gold Fields' new mine, to go into production. But the interest will come from the marginal mines. Venter-post, for example, another Gold Fields possession, was not long ago receiving

Gold could be entering new phase in its history

Higher gold prices mean longer mine lives but implies dividend restraint.

Its profits shot up in the last quarter by 272 per cent to R7.85m. After being forced to abandon work on the Middelvei area adjacent to the mine in 1976 because of the low gold price, it is now possible to look again at extending the mine.

The mining houses and individual mines are naturally happy at the thought of being wanted again. But their pleasure is not unalloyed. For a high gold price, especially if permanent, poses some real dilemmas.

If profits go up, so do taxes. Higher prices mean longer mine lives, but capital expenditure on developing new areas implies dividend restraint. A desired level of profitability, investment and dividends can be reached by jug-gling ore grades, reefs and leases many

The most important consequence of a generally higher gold price range is that the mines' lives will be extended by 15 or 20 years. In itself, this is one part of the mechanism by which supply adjusts to meet demand.

The realization that a whole industry's prospects have been transformed in less than a year is dawning on investors. It is, perhaps, the most complicated factor take into account when re-rating the prices can be reflected in dividends. This is especially true of the marginal

At some, Libanaon being an instance low profitability over a long period has resulted in little investment. To realise the mine's new potential, profits will have to be retained.

If investors want their jam to savour over many years, therefore, they may be well advised to forgo a little of it today and in the near future. To some however, they will have no choice. The taxman will see to that Gold Fields reckon that the average tax rate on West Dreis, one of South Africa's most successful gold mines, was 69.4 per cent in the last quarter, was 69.4 per cent in the last quarter, with a marginal rate of 70 per cent. Under the current tax system, to which we shall return soon in this column, different parts of a mine can be taxed on substantially different bases. Oddest of all, tax allowances for investment depend on profits against which allowances can be made in the first place. Each mine is assessed differently.

Each mine is different in mothe important respect too. Higher gold prices allow more discrimination in which parts of a mine to develop. Less ore, or more ore of a lower grade, has to be mined to maintain profits. This leads to increasing weaklengs. At West to be mined to maintain profits. This leads to intriguing problems. At West Dreis ore grades are beginning to fall, so extra investment is vital.

But at Edoof a completely different mining technique is used. The "long wall" plan means that a whole face is cut with less attention to the ore grades in the various reefs. Controlling grades in the various reefs. output and profits by switching grades is therefore harder.

Such considerations suggest that if gold is in fact not just another peak on the charts but is in a new range the gold mine sector will need careful study. A good quality mine remains a good quality mine.

But as the souring fortunes of Durban Deeps or Lorraine show—up 60 per cent in price over the last month—the previously speculative stocks could acquire a certain respectability.

A busy time for the indicators

The consumer spending boom and its effect on company profits is highlighted this week when two of the big hotel and leisure groups, Trusthouse Forte and Grand Met, announce full year profits.

In addition, another busy week is in store among the economic indicators, starting on Tuesday with the balance of payments and overseas trade figures for December from the Department of Trade and the Central Statistical Office. On Thursday the CSO publishes consumer expenditure for the fourth quarter and the Bank of England releases the United Kingdom banks assets and liabilities and the money stock for mid-December. Finally, on Friday, comes the retail prices in-dex from the Department of Employment and the index of industrial production for November, again from the CSO. The first of the major company reports comes on Wednesday, with full year figures from Tate & Lyle. Here the experts envisage a downturn in pre-tax profits from last year's f25.6m. Estimates for the full year to September 30 vary from £20m to £22m, although this will include the profit realized on the sale of its subsidiary, African Products, for £4.9m. So if this figure is stripped out it leaves profits of ground f16m to £17m. The main problems surrounding this shorp downturn include the poor performance of the group's raw sugar trade, the consolidation of its African interests and the

of 48 African interests and the sharp rise in interest rates. But prospects for the current year look good with most anti-cipating that profits have now bottomed our. Several projects augus well for this year includ-ing the reationalization of its refining interests and the group's recent expenditure in the United States. This, coupled with a fall in interest rates, should see the group go some of the way cowards a recovery.

1980s-challenge for ICI

Imperial Chemical Industries vill have to look increasingly for opportunities to expand in continental Western Europe if it is to meet the marketing chal-lenge of the 1980s, according to one of its divisional chiefs. Mr Tom Hutchison, chairman of the plastics group, said che-mical companies would have to adjust to the very rapid rise in feed stock costs, coupled with a much slower growth if the demand for their products over the next 10 years.

ICL which with sales in 1978 West Ge of £625m is Britain's largest the year. plastics, believes that growth in demands throughout Europe will be about five to six per cent a year, half the rate re-corded in the early 1970s. Nevertheless this is still twice the predicted growth for the United Kingdom market, which is one fifth the size.

Mr Hutchison believes that the impetus to expand outside Britain, will be further encouraged by a gradual decline in some of the traditional "deep-water" markets for ICI plasties bulk products as local pro-duction capacity is expanded: "This means that there must be further expansion through a policy of selective investment in Western Europe and a steady increase in exports from our ● Linguistically speaking, you will need to be very opaque to come through the first of the BBC's new Russian lessons for beginners (BBC 2, 10.20) without knowing how to say hello and goodbye. With a little extra effort, you will pick up 12 letters of the Cyrillic alphabet, be able to ask "What is it?", and learn to stop saying Russia when you really mean the Soviet Union. Male viewers should be warned that there are scrious distractions. Two of the teachers are exceptionally pretty girls, and I believe I might have added more Russian words to my vocabulary if they had been dinned into me by a lumpish lady wearing thick tweeds and pebble-lens spectacles. The series is repeated on BBC 1 every Wednesday at 12.05 pm and Sunday at 10.55 am and there are accompanying cassettes, records and a workbook to help rivet the new words firmly into place.

Panorama (BBC 1, 8.10) and Granada's World in Action (1TV, 8.30) both pose the same question, and at roughly the same bour. Are the supplies of food and drugs which relief agencies are pouring into Kampuchea, formerly Cambodia, getting through to the people who desperately need them, or are the occupying Vietnamese Army grabbing them for themselves? Panorama's filmed report is by Richard Lindley who made a secret journey to both Kampuchea and Vietnam. The World in Action team to both Kampuchea and Vietnam. The World in Action team went to a makeshift bospital near Phnom Penh where the suffering was pitiful to behold, and to a docks area where relief supplies are forming mountains because there is no way to

• A rare bird flutters through Radio 4 tonight (7.45), a play by W. S. Gilbert, unembellished by Sullivan's music. It is Engaged, a farcical comedy about money and the sort of people who were obsessed by it a century ago. There is music in it, by Robert Docker, but It wasn't there when the work was first performed in London in 1877. Sarah Badel is in the cast... On Radio 3 (7.00), a "first"—the first radio performance in Britain—and in fact the first performance of any kind in this country-of Cristobal Halffter's cantata Yes speak out Yes, which was commissioned by the United Nations to mark the 20th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Ruman Rights, and first performed in 1968 at the United Nations itself.
Orchestra and chorus are the Philharmonia, and the composer conducts. The Beethoven Mass in C, which may be to more listeners' taste, completes the programme.

No more boring holidays

The start of the end of boring holidays is to keep well away from boring people. A second important prerequisite is to holiday somewhere where there are lots of different ways of doing nothing. And if you can also find impolitated seas, uncrowded besches and lively-company you're really in business. So how? So clavy. Read the Stimmed Greek Island brochure. Its frankness, both in words and pictures, in reporting the realities of our particular resorts shock many people into booking their holiday at less stimulating venues. Which only leaves people like you. Slightly med. perhaps, but boring? Never!
